on Gen. Prettyman's right rode an elderly man clad in a rough short overcoat, a wide brimmed hat, ordinary tweed trousers and brown shoes. It was the redoubtable Cronje. His face was burned almost black and his curly beard was tinged with grey. Cronje's face was absolutely impassive, exhibiting no sign of his inner feelings.

Lord Roberts, who had walked to and fro in front of his cart while he waited, was surrounded by his staff. Gen-Prettyman, addressing the Field Marshal, said, "Commandant Cronje, Sir." The Commandant touched his hat in salute and Lord Roberts saluted in return. The whole group then dismounted and shook hands with the Boer commander.

"You made a relient detays." Sir."

London, Feb. 28.—(8:08 p.m.)—The war office has received the following despatch from Lord Roberts:

"Paardeberg, Feb. 28.—Cronje, with his family, left here yesterday in charge of Major-Gen. Prettyman and under the escort of the City Imperial Volunteers and Mounted Infantry. Later in the day the remaining prisoners went in charge of the Earl of Erroll and escorted by the Gloucesters and a hundred Imperial Volunteers. The women and children are being sent to their homes.

"I understand that great dissatisfaction was felt by the Boers at Cronje's trefusal to accept my offer of safe conduct to the women and children and medical care for the wounded, 170 of whom are now in our hospital. Very many of them are in a terrible plight for want of care at an earlier stage.

"I inspected the Boers' laager yesterday, and was much struck by the ingenuity and energy with which the position was made almost impregnable to assault."
