The proceedings opened with the reading of the following address of wolcome by F. A. Gallagher:

Your Grace, rov, gentlemen, ladies ang gentlemen—On an occasion of this kind our greatest desire is to extend to you a sincero welcome. This is our day, and your presence makes it doubly ours; for the courage comingled with joy afforded by your approval spurs uson in the course we have chosen, and is as a distant echo of the coming on of the time which we hope will bring us as fair an approbation as you give each succeeding year. There are few days in life more joyous than the one on which a college boy graduates; and the ferver which inflames his heart on such an occasion easily lends itself to welcome those who come to share in his success. There are among you many which have floated down the same stream as we. Along the margin they most sibly presented similar shoaks of difficulty. Since they have felt as we feel now, we invite them to share our soilly end of the successibly presented similar shoaks of difficulty. Since they have felt as we feel now, we invite them to share our souliments once more. In memory's must since they have stowed away' tour long, we have showed away' tour presence of Gatholicity in which promoce these frateernd collections of these frateernd collections. He would have the foolbardiness to assert that we do not feel a thousand times more pleased by his presence? His helping hand to leading aid is ser roady. He swords of encours are treasured up among memory a form of the processing of the succession of the procession of the succession of the succession of the collections. Welcome, then, Most Rev. Archibishop, and may years be granted you still to give us joy with years and welcome from near and far, old students and loving approvers, we have seen the succession of t

Rov. gentlement from near and far, old students and loving approvers, we have also a welcome word for you. We see in you our models: we bearn from you novel lessons of life; and when after a short time we shall have penetrated deep into life's labyrinth, we shall find courage in the thought that you have preceded us. But to-day we wish to kindle in your hearts the same feelings of pleasure as commencement days of long age were word to do. We wish you to share in our triumphs, and we know that your appreciation is of that sterling quality which love alone can give. Each student hids you welcome a thousand that your appreciation is of that sterling quality which love alone can give. Each student bids you welcome a thousand times. The laity of Toronto who have been with us to the last are surely welcome too. I see here many faces and I have seen them here before. I know they seen them here before. I know they come to-day with hearts overflowing with affection, and the students of the students of the students. This large audience our beloved Archbishop, the affectioned clergy and laity, has more than a passing significance. Why did they conclude you have. They come to give their approval to the progress of education. It is natural to humanity be centred approval; and here to day we receive from many friends this commendation so naturally desired. If mos who have gone into that region of mertal existence where the glowing sunset begins to descend the western horizon in goldened, if they, I say, expect approval, why should not we who are more toys in life's school expect to find in our young days their kindly interest. The soil is which success is rooted is always more fertile when irrigated by the cyclic without the whole is trigated by the cyclic white of the commendation, which is consensually selected. The Superior of the College, Rov.

Father Teety, in introducing to his Grace the Archibishop the sorral studonts who had won distinction in modals and honors, was most observed and folicitous in his romarks. Especially was this noticeable when the learned and zealous Superior came to the name of the young gentleman who is an the prize for the essay on Irisi gry -Mr. J. Brennan. 'I am' Fa ther Teety, 'a Canadian to the name born, and shall ever remember my duty to my native land; but I shall also romember cheriah and inculeate that love which we of 'rish blood owe to the and of our fathers a land which has given to the field and the forcur their most illustrious names — land which has been truly described as one of sanctity and learning, of great and glorious deeds which mast for ever illume the nages of history.

Its Graco the Archbishon, who tity and learning: of great and glorious deeds which must for ever illume the pages of history.

Ins Grace the Archbishop, who was loudly cheered on rising to complitment the students, said he was exceedingly gratified at the admirable manner in which they had acquitted themselves. All who lad heard them, as well as thimself, must have been convinced that the degree of excellence attained by the students could have been reached culy by close and diligent study; nor was their proved efficiency in the different courses of their studies, which were many and difficult, less to the credit of the faculty than to that of the pupils. The one had labored with paternal desire, and the other appreciated and availed of the precious opportunities of advancement presented His Grace, in conclusion, wished the students a very pleasant vacation, and expressed the thope that, whether they returned or not, they would always remember with affection and veneration the good fathers of St. Michael's College who had so zealously guarded their dearest interests while immates of that well-ordered institution.
