JAILBREAKER ALEX ROSE TAKEN IN WEST VIRGINIA

Arrested Flourishing Revolver—Admits Identity When Confronted by Record.

Alexander Rose, most wanted of the set of Toronto jail breakers whose arrest a reward of $300 has been offered by the province, is in custody in Huntington, West Virginia.

He was arrested there December 21 for flourishing a revolver while drunk. He was later identified as having broken into a residence in the fashionable quarter of the city. He is also believed to be implicated in still other robberies and burglaries.

The first word of his arrest came to the Toronto police from the Hamilton authorities where his description was picked out of a circular as resembling Rose. No picture accompanied the circular, which was sent out by the Hamilton police in an effort to secure information respecting Rose, who was taken under the name of Jim Mitchell.

The Toronto authorities wrote and Rose confronted with the information admitted his identity.

The local police are reticent as regards the arrest of the man in question beyond admitting that the man is arrested and positively identified.

It is understood, however, that they have known of the arrest for at least a week. It is understood that this secrecy was preserved to further an attempt to have the man returned before friends here could seek to effect his release or bail extradition.

Rose was awaiting sentence in Toronto jail, having pleaded guilty in the assault to a brutal assault upon Miss Ethel Skitch, and attempted robbery of the Wellwood fruit store on Yonge-street, and to a like assault

Political Intelligence

The Goderich Signal (Lab.) reprints a recent editorial which appeared in The World, and which made some suggestions, possibly with heading, to Opposition Leader A. G. MacKay. The Signal says:

"The Toronto World is a Conservative journal, but it does not begrudge some advice to the Liberal provincial leader. Mr. MacKay will no doubt take it for what it is worth."

The Toronto Saturday Night (Ind.) says:

"Not long ago The Toronto World offered a few hints to Hon. A. G. MacKay, leader of the Liberal party in Ontario provincial politics. Among other suggestions, Mr. MacKay was advised not to accept a salary as leader of the opposition nor allow himself to be 'grub-staked' by means of a fund collected from privilege-seeking interests."

On this point The Windsor Record replies that Mr. MacKay is not likely to err "seeing that, even were he vernal, as he isn't, he has no goods to deliver in return. Corporation grub-staking will be done where it will do the most good, to the right of the Speaker." In other words, The Record says, it is governments and not oppositions that are to govern against improper influences. This may have been true at one time, but it is present there is a widely spread belief that the art of setting what's wanted from legislators and parliament has been so highly developed within recent years, especially in the neighboring republic, that the astute negotiator, or promoter, or lobbyist, or whatever the gentleman prefers to be called, would no longer dream of expecting the leader of a government to publicly commit himself to a questionable bill, subsidy, grant or anything of that sort, until he has received unmistakable assurances that the opposition is in line, can be relied on, and will not oppose, or will strictly confine opposition to certain carefully specified

Details of no real consequence to anybody.

Continuing, Saturday Night makes a few remarks which, the directed at Harrisburg and Austin, would lead one to believe that "Mac" has visited Ottawa. To quote:

"It has been said that at times public bodies in Pennsylvania, and in Texas have been known to put up sham-dignities over bits of legislation in regard to which there was a great deal of public interest—there being a pre-arrangement of forces and a dressing out in advance of blank cartridges to the opposing troops, so that there could be all the smoke and noise of battle, yet no bungling of the result."

If an improper bill is to be put through any house of representatives, it is quite as necessary to choreograph the opposition as to hypnotize the ministry. Hon. A. G. MacKay may not be in need of advice from the press, but at any rate, he should not be misled by the suggestion that designing persons direct their attentions only to those who sit at the right of the Speaker.

An Insurance Transfer. NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—The books and policies of the Washington Life Insurance Co. of this city, which was recently sold to a group of men, who own the Pittsburgh Life and Trust Co., have been removed from this city, according to Superintendent of Insurance Otto Kelsey.
