Records of German Crime

If the various reports issued by the Belgian Commission, appointed to investigate the charges of barbarity and brutality laid against the German invaders prepared the public mind to believe almost any story of cruelty and outrage that published recently by the corresponding French Commission contains an even more ghastly and shameful record.

Kaiser's Policy of Terrorism

That is the supreme tragedy of these plain, unvarnished and restrained chronicles of murder, arson, pillage and crimes too terrible to be detailed. The narrative compiled by the French Commission is a simple and circumstantial statement of facts as given on oath by the witnesses examined and includes the sworn testimony.

Terrorism a Studied Policy

Not only have men of military age been murdered without trial of any kind but the same fate has been extended to men, women and children. It has been done, too, not merely with cold-blooded indifference, but in many instances in a manner indicating what can only be called a devilish delight in the job.

Dr. Parker's Striking Sentences

Not for the first time has the Kaiser preached this doctrine of terrorism. He did it at the time of the joint expedition to China in 1900 when the old dowager empress organized a campaign of extermination against missionaries and foreign residents.

Terrorism Only a Fizzle

The Kaiser did make that speech and he has whetted its edge by the conduct of his troops in the occupied districts of Belgium and France. There, too, the command was given to his soldiers: "So use will dare to hear a German."

THE BLOOD OF THE MAPLE

Will the U.S. Government Buy the Western Pacific?

Another United States railroad has gone into the hands of a receiver. This latest system to suffer from the operations of a so-called master of finance is the Western Pacific, an enterprise that owed its origination to the late George Gould, whose dream of establishing another transcontinental line had never chance to be realized.

In the leading editorial of a recent issue, The Financial World of New York and Chicago remarks that with Gould, the predominating thought appears to have been first to raise the money, without consideration for any of the accepted tenets of conservatism and let the future take care of itself.

This did not represent the whole of Gould's financing. He controlled the Denver and Rio Grande railroad and yoked it up with the Western Pacific to the extent of guaranteeing the interest and principal of the first mortgage bonds. The Denver also holds the second mortgage issue, none of which, fortunately for the investing public, has been placed on the market.

These being the circumstances, The New York American comes out with the suggestion that the United States Government should become the purchaser of the Western Pacific road. It thinks the government could get the property for about one-third of its indebtedness and one-third of its actual cost.

of the States would be a safeguard to the Pacific Coast, that has so long stumbled under the burden of railroad monopoly. Will President Wilson take advantage of this opportunity? He has been urging the public ownership of steamers—why not of railroads?

World Concern of the Mediterranean

Not even the first great drive of the German armies thru Belgium and Northern France, the capture of Brussels and the fall of Antwerp have so held the attention of the world as the operations now in progress in the Dardanelles. The significance of the place held by Constantinople was not at first fully recognized.

Unity of the British Empire

Now that Canadians are in the trenches on the western front of the European war and their names appear in the casualty lists that are awaited with so much anxiety, the people of the Dominion will more immediately realize their place and responsibilities in and towards the British Empire.

British peoples have nothing to regret in that they have become participants in this greatest and most momentous of world wars. Men of the Empire have rushed to the colors from the seven seas. The unity, the enthusiasm, the self-sacrifice that have sprung into being provide a living inspiration to the world.

CRUSTS AND CRUMBS

By Albert Ernest Stafford

THERE is only one passage in the Bible, I think, which directly and unequivocally warrants anyone in the internal use of alcoholic liquors, but I never hear it quoted by those who subject themselves to the influences of the poison.

It is contended by these loud opinion people that a man ought to have a right to burn down his house if he had a mind to, and to beat his wife to death if he pleased. We know that there has been the liberties of the subject in these respects. People make a fuss about this, if one attempts to burn down his house. They say: "Endangering other houses, and costing money to get out the fire-brigade, and the people who have their own own fish interests in view, also object. One is no longer allowed to burn his wife to death without a row being made about it by the police. No man can enjoy being drunk, when he is less than a citizen, properly so called in that state, and of course he is not to be punished for doing it, unless he is being ably pressed upon."

Another mercenary element is introduced into the discussion by cranks. They declare that it does not and to imbibe poisonous liquors or to encourage their use. They point out that the big business men (really in order to get more work out of their hands) insist on temperance habits among their employees. They won't employ an engineer who has been drinking. The banks are not to employ a clerk who has been drinking. Even newspaper editors refuse to hire reporters who go to the office with a hangover.

I AM quite prepared to believe, and I do believe that when people have attained a certain stage of development, they attain such a measure of control over the physical body that they can directly influence the organs and the blood to reject without injury any toxic element introduced into the system. I believe, however, that this involves a mental antagonism towards the element so introduced, so that the neutralizing forces of the body would not be introduced voluntarily. A toxic substance is a poisonous substance. An intoxicant is therefore a poison, but people do not understand the English language definitely, and few realize that when they drink an intoxicant they are drinking a poison, and that there should be a red label on the bottle, and it should have a three-cornered shape with a rough and lumpy surface so that it could be recognized in the dark and not taken by mistake.
