How to set a 'Good Table'

There is hardly a housekeeper at this time who is not face to face with the problem of how she is to get along now that her supply of home-made Preserves is about exhausted. It is indeed a serious problem, for no housekeeper can present a good table unless she has some pies, tarts or preserves. That's what we want to talk to you about. We want to tell you how you can replenish your vanishing larder.

Hartley's Jams and Marmalades.

BUSINESS IN LIBRARY

DR. G. H. LOCKE IS AN AGGRES-SIVE CURATOR OF BOOKS.

"oronto's Chief Librarian Has Applied Modern Methods to the Running of the Public's Literary Storehouse and Astonishing Results Have Been Shown—Had Been an Academic and Wanderer.

Conventionality is not a conspicu-ous characteristic in the make-up of George H. Locke, Toronto's Chief Lib-rarian. Traditions were shattered ous characteristic in the make-up of George H. Locke, Toronto's Chief Librarian. Traditions were shattered when he was appointed, and customary usages have gone by the board ever since. He has completely upset the popular conception of what a librarian should be, and has, for Canada at any rake, established a new idea of the duties of the office. He stands to-day the impersonation of vigorous, up-to-date administration of a highly important public service.

The son of a Methodist clergyman, he had been brought up in cultured surroundings and had the benefit of a university education. He was born on March 29, 1870, when his father was stationed at Beamsville, and as a boy he attended Ryerson Public School in Toronto, and the Brampton and Collingwood Collegiate Institutes, Then he entered Victoria University, graduating in 1893. Following graduation he took up academic pursuits and for several years roved around from university to university. For a time he went to Chicago; from there to Harvard; then back to Chicago, where, in 1803, he became Dean of the College of Education. In 1905 he entered the employ of Ginn & Co., of Boston, the big school book publishers, as head of the editorial department. Two years later he returned to Canada as Dean of the School of Education at Macdonald College, and in 1908 terminated his wanderings

MR. GEORGE H. LOCKE. by becoming Chief Librarian

Dr. Locke may not have possessed the appearance or bearing of the conventional librarian and bookworm, conventional librarian and bookworm, yet his qualifications for the work before him were not limited to one or two items. He had a good knowledge of literature, he was familiar not only with the insides of books, but possessed a useful acquaintance with their production and manufacture; he was a specialist in education, which was a function of library work too little dwelt upon; he was, above all, sociable and well able to take care of himself on a public platform. All himself on a public platform. All these qualities combined weighed strongly in his favor with the Library Board, and he was selected out of a nsiderable number of likely can-

Board, and he was selected out of a considerable number of likely candidates.

Dr. Locke makes no secret of the fact that running a library is a business proposition, however much libraries may impress the public as being places entirely outside and above the business world. He is managing director of the Toronto Public Library Co., Unlimited, and, like the executive heads of more obviously mercantile establishments, he has endeavored ever since he took office to manage the library on scientific lines of efficiency, economy and usefulness. That no dividends are paid, save in the form of gifts of pleasure to those who patronize the library, does not lessen the need for businesslike administration.

Aggression has been the keynote of the Locke regime. It was not sufficient, in his opinion, for a library to be merely a storehouse of books, no matter how well stocked, well arranged and well managed, if it remained passive and walked for the people to come to it. Unless the public were educated into the use of its privileges, it was not serving its highest purpose. This idea has been at the back of what may be called the popularizing movement. First, it was a case of taking down the barriers and letting those who used the library set right's at the books. Then came facilities by means of which those who wanted to read particular books were enabled to put in special application for them. Latterly, a determined, stiempt has been made to interest the children, The installation of juvenile departments, in the new library building, the establishment of book eluba, the starting of the "Story Hour," have all been arranged to stract children, and great, has been the success of the endeavor.

Cavanagh, Forest Ranger. The Great Conservation Novel

BY HAMLIN GARLAND. Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland.

"I was afraid you'd shoot." Lize ex plained to Ross, "and I didn't want you to muss up your hands on the dirty oafers. I had the right to kill. The were trespassers, and I'd 'a' done i tually assault me," he said, "but it's a bit discouraging to find the town so indifferent over both the breaking of the laws and the doings of a drunken mob. I'm afraid the most of them are a long way from law abiding people yet."

Joe, who did not like the position in which he stood as respecting Lee, here made an offer of aid. "I don't suppose upy word is any good low, but if you'll let me do it I'll go sut and round up Judge Higley. I think I know where he is." To this Lize objected, "You can't do that, Ross; you better hold the fort here till morning."

Lee was rather sorry, too, for young Gregg, who bore his buffeting with turbable face of the heroes of his class. He had gone into this en-terprise with much the same spirit in which he had stolen gates and mis-placed signs during his brief college placed signs during his brief conego career, and he was now disposed (in the presence of a pretty girl) to carry it out with undiminished impudence. "It only means a fine, anyway," he as-sured himself.

cavenagh did not trust Gregg, either, and as this was the first time he had been called upon to arrest men for killing game out of season he could not afford to fall of any precaution. Tired and sleepy as he was he must remain on guard. "But you and your daughter must go to bed at once," he Lize, under the spur of her dram, talked on with bitter boldness, berating the town and its people. Gregg listened to her with expressionless vislistened to her with expressionless vis-age, his eyes dreamily fixed on Lee's face, but his companion, the old herd-er, seemed to palpitate with shame and fear. And Ross had the feeling at the moment that in this ragged, un-kempt old hobo was the skeleton of one of the old time heroes. He was wasted with drink and worn by wind and rain, but he was very far from Lee Virginia, with an understanding of what the ranger had endured, ask-bd: "Can't I get you something to eat? Would you like some coffee?"

"I would indeed," he answered, and his tone pleased her.
She hurried away to get it, while Davanagh disposed his prisoners her. Davanagh disposed his prisoners be Lee returned soon with a pot of bresh coffee and some sandwiches, the light of which roused young Gregg to the impudent remark: "Well, notice that! And we're left out!" But Edwards shrank into the shadow, as if the light burt him.

Ross thanked Lee formally, but here were reported in the control of the light burt him.

there was more than gratitude in his glance, and she turned away to hide her face from other eyes. Strange place it was for the blooming of love's roses, but they were in her cheeks as she faced her mother, and Lize, with fresh acknowledgment of her beauty, broke-out-again: "Well, this settles it. I'm going to get out of this town, dearle. I'm done. This ends the cat-tle country for me. I ought to have turned you back the day you landed "Who's there?" demanded Lize.

"The law?" replied a wheezy voice.

"Open in the name of the law!"

"It's old Higtey," announced Lize.

"Open the door, Ross."

"Come in, law," she called ironically as the justice appeared. "You look kind of mice eaten, but you're all the law this blame town can sport. Come in and do your duty." Higley (a tall man with a rusty brown beard, very much on his dig-nity) entered the room, followed by a short, bullet headed citizen in a rum-pled blue suit with a big star on his breast. Behind on the sidewalk Ballard and a dozen of his gang could be seen. Sam Gregg, the moving cause of this resurrection of law and order, followed the constable. Higley opened upon Cavanagh. "No," she said huskily, but with decision; "I'm only tired. I'll be all right soon. Send the people away. Tell 'em to go to bed."

For half an hour Cavanagh remained in the room waiting to see if the doctor's services would be required, but at the end of that time, as she

"There's no danger. These hoodlun would not dare to attack me." "Nevertheless you shall not go!" she declared. "Wait a moment," she com-manded and re-entered her mother's
