

ABOUT SHOWCASES.

Used in Many Businesses, Sold in Large Numbers, and Many Exported.

The largest consumers of showcases are the cigar dealers, and next to them the druggists. Dry goods dealers use more showcases now than ever before, and large numbers of showcases are used for men's furnishing goods and for millinery, and many are used by hatmakers, especially for outside display. In some cities outside showcases are not permitted, but in many cities they are, and large numbers of showcases for outdoor display are sold, not only for hatmakers, but for florists and for dealers in many other trades.

There is hardly a business in which indoor showcases are not used more or less. Confectioners use many showcases, many are used in bakeries, and they are used in grocery stores. Many are used in notion stores as well as in toy shops. They are commonly used in hardware stores for the display of the finer cutlery. Undertakers use them to show the costly modern burial coffins. Stationers use showcases; so do jewellers for the display of jewelry and silverware.

A great many small showcases are given away by manufacturers of various articles, as thread, or sewing silks, or perfumery, and for various other things, for the better and more convenient display of their own goods. Showcases were never so cheap as now; good, modern showcases can be bought at what seem marvelously low prices, and the finer showcases were never so handsome nor so well fitted up and perfectly adapted to their several uses as now. The old style showcase had a vertical face and a level top. Then came showcases with bevelled fronts, and cases with the front panel of bent glass, making a rounded front. Now the old style has come back again, and there are sold at present more showcases with square fronts. Showcases have a greater variety of style than ever before, upright and otherwise, for cases, for corsets, and for many other special lines of goods. The showcase of the moment, made by all manufacturers and called in the trade "the silent salesman," is a case made to hold the place of both counter and showcase. The top of this case is at the same height that the top of a showcase on a counter would be, but the case reaches down nearly to the floor, where it rests upon a platform or base perhaps six or eight inches high. This is really a showcase three or four feet in height, extending practically from the floor upward, with a flat top and a flat top. It is made in any length—six feet, ten feet, or any other length to fit spaces. It is provided with glass shelves for the display of goods, or with drawers tiered back so that at least a part of their contents can be seen.

Showcases are made with wood frames in various fine woods, and with metal frames, and there are now made, including cases of all sizes, showcases with neither wood nor metal upon the edges, the plates of glass being cemented together, and the case being further and further secured by a steel rod running through it just within the angle at the corners.

The newer styles of cigar cases have moistening trays, which slide under the case and are out of sight. They are very shallow trays, with a metal lining, and containing a sheet of felt, which can be moistened, the moisture remaining for days; this is in place of the cup and sponge within the case among the cigars. Many cases both upward and horizontal, designed for one purpose and another, are equipped with brackets or with notched uprights to hold the ends of rods, by means of which the glass shelves in them can be adjusted at any height, according to the requirements of the goods it may be desired to display in them.

The introduction of the incandescent electric light made possible the convenient lighting of outdoor showcases with fixtures that could be moved with the case, and now inside showcases are frequently provided with appliances for electric illumination.

There are made folding showcases which can be folded up to occupy less space in shipment, and there are made showcases that can be knocked down, like furniture, so as to take less space in shipment. The greater number of cases, however, are

TROUBLESOME "CONTINUITY."

They Sent Daily Messages to Establish a Perfect Continuity.

The recent life of Cyrus W. Field by his daughter, Mrs. Judson, recalls many interesting incidents of the laying of the Atlantic cable and the festivities following upon its completion. One of the most amusing has to do with the remarks of an anxious sailor on board the Niagara, one of the two vessels—the other was the Agamemnon—which carried the first successful cable the whole way across.

These two vessels, each bearing half the historic wire, had steamed into mid-ocean, there lain to and spliced their halves, then sunk the light between them and steamed away from each other, one to Valentia and the other to Trinity Bay, laying out the cable as they went.

During the voyage they were able to send each other telegraphic signals, and did so frequently, as the electricians were anxious to be sure that "the continuity was perfect." The phrase was so often used that it became familiar to the sailors' ears, and it puzzled them much. A clever newspaper man on board reported the remarks of one interested but unscientific sea-dog, who had been one of the crew of an earlier expedition, when the cable had parted and been lost.

"Blow the continuity!" he grumbled to a crowd of his messmates, who had been talking matters over; "blow the continuity! I wish they'd get rid of it altogether. It's caused a sight more trouble than the whole thing is worth. I say they ought to do without it and let it go. I believe they'd get the cable down if they didn't pay any attention to it."

"You see," he continued, "I was on the last expedition" (he meant the expedition, but the word was all the same to his mates; they understood) "and I thought I'd never hear the end of it. They were always talking about it, and one night when we were out last year it was gone for two hours, and we thought that was the end of the affair, and we would never hear of it again. But it came back—and soon after the cable busted."

Now I tell you what, men, I'll never forget that night; never, I tell you! We all felt we'd lost our best friend, and I've never heard the word continuity or continuity mentioned since but I was afraid something was going to happen; that's a fact."

He must have been infinitely relieved when the Niagara arrived at Trinity Bay, with cable and the continuity both safe.

A SOURCE OF SUNSHINE.

A Bright, Sunny Manner Better than Great Beauty.

The charm of manner that is as welcome as the sunshine is a gift more to be desired than any grace of physical beauty. A writer to the Ladies' Home Journal, in a description of two young friends of hers, gives some helpful suggestion to our girl readers.

I know two girls who live in the same town. One of them is considered very beautiful, graceful and bright; she has a few friends, but the majority of her associates and her mother's and father's friends feel entirely indifferent to her, while some comment unfavorably upon her repellent manners. The other girl is not nearly so pretty, and not a whit brighter, but she has sweet, gracious ways with old people and children, with her mother's friends and her own, with the tradespeople and servants, and every one in the town is her admirer, champion and friend. Wherever she goes, smiles and blessings attend her. Have you not observed the blessed presence of a gracious girl like this at a social gathering? She smiles brightly at her hostess, and enters heartily into the pleasures provided for her; stops in the corner for a brief chat with the dear old grandmother, and watches for an opportunity to exchange an unaffected greeting with her host. She compliments the pretty costume or sweet voice of a shrinking girl, and makes the awkward boys, who are just entering society, feel comfortable by her unstudied ease and cordiality. She quietly thanks the servants for their services, is ready for a romp with the baby brother, or a game of dolls with the little sisters, and makes herself a veritable source of sunshine to a whole gathering or to an entire household.
