[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in order to facilitate the debate which will be taking place in the course of the next few minutes, perhaps it will be useful to talk for a couple of minutes about what this debate is not about. This debate is not about the issue of whether there is a role for Crown corporations in the energy field in the future. That is an issue to be debated on another occasion. What the debate is about this afternoon is the question whether or not Parliament has a role to play in being consulted and involved before the government sets up new Crown corporations in the energy field. That is the first issue.

The second issue is what responsibility does Parliament have on a continuing basis to ensure that Crown corporations operating in the marketplace operate in a way that is fair and proper and which shows respect for the tax dollars of the taxpayers of Canada and for the intention of Parliament when it passes legislation that Crown corporations conduct themselves in a proper way.

We have just voted on three amendments to this legislation which is before us today. I moved two of the amendments. One of those amendments was very straightforward and would have simply required that the procedure which would have been followed by the government for incorporating a new energy Crown corporation would be followed as well for subsidiaries.
