

The new project will allow 100 Baltic dairy farm managers and veterinarians to receive training at the International Livestock Management Schools (ILMS) of Kemptville, Ontario. Top graduates from the Canadian courses will participate in follow-up training in the Baltic States. Through this process, it is expected that up to 1,200 people will receive instruction.

This is one of about 14 Canadian technical assistance projects for the Baltic States currently completed or approved. Other projects include assistance to the foreign ministries and parliaments of Lithuania and Latvia, and technical and practical advice to firms adapting to a market economy.
