JULY.—Having said something about cheese making, we may profitably add the experience of a farmer's wife, about making a press. A very simple but rude press may be constructed by any farmer's wife in five minutes, which will answer a good purpose. Place the cheese on a piece of broad board a little inclined, and use a fence rail for a lever, placing one end under a building or any other structure of sufficient weight, and on the other end lean a couple of rails or hang a pail of stones. Cheese should be pressed only hard enough to remove the whey. A little practice will make perfect. While pressing, the cheese should always be kept shaded from the sun. Follow these rules judiciously, and you will have good cheese to use or to sell.
