Case, Ont., Dec. 14th, 1910.
I have been using your Spavin Cure for a number of years with good success, having during that time cured a Spavin on a valuable horse and have also treated bruises, swellings, etc. effectively.

Christian Bender
W. W. Brown, Content, Alta. writes July 18th, 1910
"I have used your Spavin Cure for years, and have completely cured Post Pot in my herd of cattle, and Splints and Spavins on horses. I find that it cures whenever it is faithfully applied."

No need to worry about your horse if you have a bottle of Kendall's Spavin Cure on hand for emergency. Get a bottle from your druggist at once. Don't take a substitute. The great book, "Treatise on the Horse," free of druggists, or write to
Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburg Falls, Vt.

He sprang behind Macpherson, raised his bludgeon, holding it aloft for a moment as if to be fatally certain of his aim and the next moment it would have crashed into the skull of the mate; but while it was still raised in the air, the sharp voice of a well-known weapon shattered the night's silence, and with a groan and a curse, the gigantic form of the would-be murderer crashed on the deck.

Sam's eyes instinctively turned at the instant to the point whence the pistol flashed and to his amazement, there stood Sonny or the apparition of the boy, for he was clad only in his night garments and the smoke from the shot that had found his mark still circled around and crowned him with a ghostly halo.

"Look for the skipper, Sonny—quick! and shake up the boys in the fo'c'sle!"

It was the mate who spoke, his voice hoarse with excitement and indignation, but it put nerve into the brave, little fellow and his wits sprang to his command at the instant.

"Unc' Sam!" he cried in terror when he found the prostrate form of the skipper, but another shout quickly announced his joy as he found him alive, uninjured, and in possession of every faculty saving the powers of speech and locomotion.

He was cut free from every fetter, and the moment he could use his limbs he sprang to the assistance of the mate, while Sonny had the crew awakened and on deck. The mate's prisoner, having been fairly secured, the wounded man was taken in hand. Lights were procured and these were brought to where he lay, two members of the night police patrol came on deck, attracted by the gun shot, and matters were quickly explained to them.

Poor old Josh had been roughly handled but was gradually recovering from the shock he had sustained. The scoundrel had stunned the poor fellow the moment he had shown signs of disturbing them in their search, but from the keen interest he took in all that was going on, it was evident that the time had not yet arrived when he should pay in his checks. When he made inquiries about the sacred vessel which had been his thought by day, his dream by night, Sam compassed him with lies and dodged every inquiry with his own matchless skill in the use of subterfuge lest the shock of its loss might kill him on the spot.

One of the crew with a ship's lantern, in guiding the operations of the policeman was performing the office of first aid to the victim of Sonny's bullet, flashed a strong shaft of light on the man's face. It's ghostly aspect drew an exclamation from some one, and all turned to look at it.

"My God, its Elmer!" the old man cried, shivering in every
