Tractioning the Soil Continued from page 15 And Adam perished—as all men must; But his sons still plowed the soil Till the slow kine under the yoke were thrust To lighten and aid men's toil;

And the oxen's strength made the furrows deep And the field were richer for men to reap. Men plowed and gathered. Men lived and died. But the ox plow held full sway, Till the swifter strength of the horse was tried, And the plodding ox gave way. And the plaintive wails of the farmer ceased As his fields grew broad and his crops increased.

Then came to the plowing a giant power, Invisible, hot as fire. And the task of days was but an hour To this servant that would not tire. And the labor of old is a by-gone dream For the fields are plowed by Giant Steam or Gasoline.

Estimate of Power

Those who incline to place a low estimate upon their powers should remember, first of all, that they cannot judge correctly. No one knows himself sufficiently well to presume or to despair; and there is as much presumption in declaring that we can do nothing as in boasting that we can do everything. The truth is, that we are, happily, not called upon to make any such analysis or decision at all. Certain duties appeal to us as ours, and we should take them up, humbly and modestly, it is true without arrogance or boast, yet firmly and cheerfully, in the confidence that, if they belong to us, we shall acquire the requisite ability to perform them. One thing is certain—if we do not try, we shall never accomplish; and whether it is the schoolboy with a difficult problem to solve, or the guilty man with a character to retrieve, if discouraging thoughts of self are allowed to play palsy effort, failure must certainly ensue.
