ON GRIEVANCES.

How some people do enjoy a grievance! Give them their choice between having something very nice done for them or something over which they would have a right to feel greatly aggrieved, and I am sure they would choose the latter. No, that's not right. For if you a fuss about or, worse still, to hold up against each other. The golden rule of the marital relation is to bear and forbear. And when you substitute for that attitude, the grievance-hunting habit, you make sure of plenty of trouble. For there is one sure thing about grievance—no one ever hunted for them in vain.

Why Women Have It More Than Men.

I think women are more prone to this habit than men, partly because they usually do have more to feed it on. (You know the old saying, "Women give and forgive, men get and forget.") Partly also because their lives are often so monotonous that even the mental excitement of feeling aggrieved is a welcome stimulus. The first half of the cure for such a state of mind is to become conscious of it. The other half is to fill one's mind with some other and more healthy interest. Vague advice, I know, but how can I make it more definite without knowing the individual case?

She Loves Her Homemade Grievances

I know an elderly maiden lady one of the chief pleasures of whose life is in creating a certain kind of grievance for herself and then fussing about it. She has a great deal of time to spare and she will urge people to let her do things of one sort or another for them—get the material, and let her make them a sweater, or a rag rug—and then when the unwary ones accept her generous offer, she will go ahead and do the thing, complaining all the time to anyone who will listen, how hard she works, and how tired she feels, and how she must keep on because she promised that rug would be done at a certain time (she usually sets the time herself and the recipient probably doesn't care a continental whether it is done then or not) and how little gratitude she gets.

In this case, the taste for grievances doesn't do so much harm, for all her friends understand it and don't let her enjoyment of her homemade grievances bother them.

Beware of the Grievance Habit in Married Life.

But there are cases where such a taste makes a lot of unhappiness. For instance, when married people are always on the lookout for some slight grievance or injustice to make

THINKING OF SPRING.

I do not mind the winter weather, when I am seated by the fire, with some chaste volume bound in leather, or with my dulcimer or lyre. But when the autumn must be started, and I must crank her half a day, the winter finds me broken hearted and yearning for the bloom of May. In spring I merely press the starter, and pistons whiz to beat the band, but now, a pale and frozen martyr, I turn a rusty crank by hand. Last night, alas, I failed to drain her, and now the water's frozen hard, and it has cracked the steel container; I hand out language by the yard. I call aloud for springtime zephyrs, for azure skies and babbling rills, for pastures with their grazing heifers, and sunshine gliding verdant hills. I cry, "Send back the scent of roses. O Mother Nature, send it back; pray, pray, can these winds that freeze our noses, and put our motors out of whack." I like to hear the north wind howling through long dark nights, to wake the dead; I like to hear the frost king growling when I am safely tucked in bed. But when I try to crank the auto, upon a bleak and bitter morn, I yearn for sylvan nook and grotto, and warm winds blowing through the corn.

An After-Dinner Conundrum.

I heard a good story the other day concerning Sir Oliver Lodge, whose name has been so prominent before the public of late.

It appears that in his younger days he was a pretty expert trencher-man. At a certain public dinner he attended, and at which, besides himself, there were quite a number of learned gentlemen present, Sir Oliver did exceptional justice to one of the courses—a roast stuffed goose.

After the dinner came the speeches, and in the course of one of them a guest asked this conundrum:

"What great change has taken place during this dinner?"

It was given up. He had to answer his own conundrum; which he did as follows:

"When we began, we had a goose stuffed with sage; now, we have finished, we have a sage stuffed with goose."

Not Respectable.

The ever popular Dorothy Ward, who in private life is Mrs. Shaun Glenville, is adding to her triumphs as Jack in "Jack and the Beanstalk" at the Olympia, Liverpool. She told me an amusing story concerning the birth of her baby some years ago.

A photograph was duly taken of the mother and child, and widely exhibited with a placard, "Miss Dorothy Ward and her Baby," during the following pantomime season in Manchester, where the actress was appearing. The exhibition of the photograph, however, was refused in one place—a newsagent's shop run by two maiden ladies. When they were asked for their reasons for not showing the poster, the spinsters' faces were rival studies in shocked modesty and indignation.

"How could we," they exclaimed, "advertise the photograph of an unmarried girl with her baby? Our business has always been respectable."

Mainly About People.

About everybody knows Charles M. Schwab as a steel king, but few know him as an author. He has written "Succeeding with what you have," a gospel of common sense filled with a good deal of material, throwing light on his own success. There is lots of literary merit in the book.

John Ward, the "Buffalo Bill of the British Parliament," is 6 feet 2 inches. The tallest soft white hat ever seen in Westminster is responsible for the nickname. He was with Kitchener in Africa, and organized the dockers' union, who is turn sent him to Parliament. He raised a battalion of dockers for service in France.

General Andranik Ozanian is the military hero of the Armenians. Most of his life of 50 years he has spent in fighting the Turks. He is soldier, patriot and law giver. During the recent war, on the Russian side, he had a fighting command of 40 battalions. He has a French decoration and will be awarded a British one.

Earl Haig on entering the upper house of the British parliament recalled an incident to Lord Birkenhead, the chancellor, whose duty it was to receive him. When the latter, then Sir F. E. Smith, was at the English front in France, a Tommy arrested him for disregarding a sentry's challenge. It was found necessary to appeal to General Haig to get his release.

Six English women have been appointed magistrates. They are Mrs. David Lloyd George, wife of the prime minister; Marchioness of Creve, younger daughter of the Earl of Rosebery; Marchioness of Londonderry, head of a political salon; Mrs. Humphrey Ward, an author; Mrs. Sidney West, social worker; Miss Elizabeth Haldane, sister of Lord Haldane, and Miss Gertrude Truckwell.

When Winston Churchill was out of office as a result of the Gallipoli failure he started the English public by becoming a full-fledged landscape painter. His creations are only on view to intimate friends. He has also gone into painting of portraits and one of Sir John Lavery, the famous artist, was recently exhibited in a London gallery. It is pronounced pretty good for an amateur.

of the company, has been the Montreal representative of the line for some years past. Until 1896 he had been connected with the foreign freight department of the C. P. R. Mr. Binning was for some years a director of the Canadian Steamship Lines, Ltd., and vice-President of the Northern Navigation Co., is an ex-treasurer of the Montreal Board of Trade, and has been identified with the work of the Shipping Federation of Canada since its inception.

Every European embassy in the United States, with a chateleine, has an American woman in that position. Madame Jussorand (Miss Eliza Richards), wife of the French ambassador, is a native of Boston. Senor di Riano (Miss Alicia Ward) the Spanish ambassador's wife, is of New York; Baroness de Castles de Maschienco (Miss Marie Dow), bride of the Belgian ambassador, was Mrs. Hamilton Wilkes Cary, of Boston. Baroness Avezzano, wife of the new Italian ambassador, Miss Marie Jacqueline Taylor, of St. Louis. The wife of the counsel of this embassy, Mme. Giuseppe Brannilla, is the daughter of the late George von Lengerke Meyer, of Boston.

Autograph hunters have been particularly ruthless in the case of Mme. Tetrazzini, the great opera singer, while in London. She has been inundated with requests, and one of these requests led to a rather amusing incident. It came from a lady, and in order to satisfy her the singer scribbled her name on a visiting card and sent it to her. A day or two later the lady wrote again. "Dear Madam," the letter ran. "I have presented your card at the box at Convent Garden for two seats, but they would not give them to me on your card alone. I herewith inclose card you sent me. Will you please write: 'Oblige my good friend with two seats,' and we will try again."
