Edwards' Company

PRESENT "THE BRONZE GOD-DRESS."

Dramatic scenes and climaxes followed each other in quick succession in the play of the Edwards' Company at the Grand Theatre last night. The motif, deep and crooked and the theme is carried out in a very sensational conclusion when the Kapp (Chas. T. Smith), kills and himself falls a victim to the same aim of the paralytic, but before he has cleared up the story of the real paralytic, the Kapp (Chas. T. Smith), who was according to the story, Basil Courtney, (the paralytic) and lives, it is presumed, ever after. Miss Edwards was very pleasing in the role of Miss Kapp, while Malcolm Murray as the adopted son and lover of the paralytic, to the great occasion and the play is somewhat complicated, but the elucidation in the hands of those already mentioned, and Miss Gertrude Riggs as Violet, Miss Marie Fischer as Janet, and Miss Drew, Bradley's faithful maid and Bart Crawford as "Bud" Bradley's punctilious valet, all played to the great delight of the audience. The character of the paralytic, Hilary, was played by Jack Werner, who was one of the most difficult parts he has yet undertaken. The play was repeated to-night. To-morrow a clever drama entitled "The Story of Polly," the story of a choice between two roads, one leading to the other to happiness, will be played. Patrons would do well not to miss this. Last night the stage was set with the usual high class and Gallagher and Shean were on the stage to the infinite delight of the gods who repeatedly made their appearance to-night, with all their latest parodies.

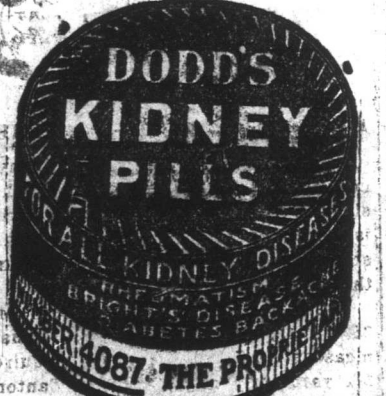

Wedding Bells.

PIKE-JONES.

The Methodist Church, on Monday evening, 11th inst., was the scene of a very pretty wedding, when at 6.30, a large gathering of well wishers, Miss Elsie Pike, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Pike of this town, and Mr. Sydney T. Jones, of Little Bay Islands, N.D.B., were united in Holy Matrimony. The strains of the Bridal Chorus the bride, who was prettily attired in a dress of blue silk, with hat to match, entered the church leading on the arm of her brother-in-law, Mr. James Teaford, while the groom was supported by Mr. Cecil Pike, brother of the bride, Miss Belle Pike, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid. Prior to the marriage ceremony the hymn "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden" was sung. After the nuptial knot had been tied by the officiating minister, Rev. Wm. Harris, pastor of the church, the bride party repaired to the vestry, and the Register being signed, left the church again, as the Wedding March was being played by the Organist, Miss Gladys Parsons. The party then motored to the home of the bride's parents, on Harvey Street, where the reception was held. On Saturday last the members of the Girls' Guild of the Methodist Church, gave the bride, who has been a good worker in this organization for some time, a surprise party at the home of Mrs. John Butt, Cochrane Street, and presented her with a purse of gold as a slight token of their appreciation, and with best wishes. Supper was served and a happy social time spent until 11.30 p.m. The happy couple leave by to-morrow morning's train for St. John's, to take passage by the S.S. Prospero en route to their future home at Little Bay Islands. We trust that Mr. and Mrs. Jones will enjoy many years of unclouded happiness as they voyage along over the matrimonial sea on which they have just entered.—COR.

Waterspout Wonders.

A remarkable experience recently befell the crew of the steamship Carson, off Guantanamo, Cuba.

One afternoon the vessel was caught in a tropical thunderstorm, which lasted for about three-quarters of an hour. Then the wind dropped suddenly and the low clouds began to send down a number of long, tapering arms towards the water.

These arms were constantly changing their shape and size. Sometimes some of the smaller ones spinning at an almost incredible speed. When a larger spout was formed it would absorb all the smaller ones around it. At one time no fewer than nine waterspouts were visible at the same moment.

Waterspouts are fairly common in the course of the Gulf Stream, and one is occasionally seen round the British coast. But to encounter them in such numbers is an almost unheard-of occurrence.

They are caused by small swirls of air, which are brought about by conflicting currents in the atmosphere. These swirls suck up the water from the sea, sometimes in the form of spray, but more often in the form of a great swaying column of solid water. As the spout reaches the clouds, which are always low at such a time, it spreads out and breaks into drops, which are scattered through the body of the clouds.

The Ghosts of Parliament.

SOME WEIRD APPARITIONS.

(From Glasgow Weekly Herald.) While "Silent Members" may be regarded as the modern substantial ghosts of the House of Commons, there are also spectres reported on the precincts of the Famous Legislative Chamber of more romantic and tragic character.

One of the most cherished, traditional possessions of Westminster is the Terrace ghost, a weird apparition, taking the shape of a tall lady attired in shimmering white, who on foggy nights perambulates the Terrace, finally hurling herself, uttering a despairing shriek, over the parapet into the dark waters of the Thames.

"Big Ben's" ghost is said only to appear in the vicinity of the House on the occasion of the death of a royal personage, or prominent member. As the midnight hour booms forth from "Big Ben" the ghost appears rowing an old leaky boat from the shadow of Westminster Bridge towards St. Stephen's. As the last stroke of twelve strikes the spectral boatman and his craft mysteriously disappear.

A "T. P." Story.

A strange ghost story is told in connection with T. P. O'Connor, the "father of the House." One morning, early in the year 1897, Mr. O'Connor hurriedly set off for Ireland to the bedside of a dying parent. His seat in the House in those days was on the third bench on the Opposition side below the gangway, and that night his great friend, T. Swift M'Neil, declared he saw "T.P." sitting there, and several members of the Press Gallery corroborated the statement. Yet Mr. O'Connor was in Ireland.

With such a romantic figure as Guy Fawkes connected with Westminster it is not surprising that his ghost is said to haunt the vaults, while a "white lady" has been seen to glide from lobby to lobby, wailing piteously and wringing her hands.

There is even a story of how the ghost of a certain M.P. actually vowed at a division. This gentleman who was in ill-health, went abroad to recuperate, and while there received a five-line whip urging his attendance at the House for an important division. He sent a reply stating that he would certainly be there, and on the night in question the teller saw the M.P., and recorded his vote. Next day, however, it was discovered that the number of votes recorded was one less than the number given by the Lobby tellers, and that on the list of the former the M.P.'s name did not appear as it did in the latter's. It was later revealed that the member had breathed his last while on the Continent at the very hour the division was taken.
