Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow;
It strayed away one summer day
Where lambs should never go.

Then Mary sat her quickly down
And tears streamed from her eyes;
She never found her lamb, because
She did not advertise.

And Mary had a brother John, Who kept a village store; He sat him down and smoked his pipe And watched the open door,

And as the people passed along And did not stop to buy, John still sat down and smoked his pipe And blinked his sleepy eye.

And so the sheriff closed him out, But still he lingered near, And Mary came to drop with him A sympathetic tear.

"How is it, sister, can you tell Why other merchants here Sell all their goods so readily And thrive from year to year?"

Remembering her own bad luck,
The little maid replies:
"Those other fellows get there, John,
Because they advertise."

"Of course you can rely upon me," he said.
"Very well. I am sure I shall never have to reproach you with the words. I will tell you. I have virtually promised to marry Mr. Edward Cossey, should he at any time be in a position to claim fulfillment of the promise, on condition of his taking up the mortgages on Honham, which he has done."
Harold Quaritch took a step back and

And this money which her father was expending so cheerfully was part of the price for which she had bound herself.

With a sigh he rose and said good-night, and went home with feelings almost too mixed to admit accurate description. He had taken a great step in his life, and to a certain extent that step had succeeded. He had not altogether built his hopes upon sand, far from what Ida had said, and still more from what she had tacitly admitted, it was necessarily clear to him that she did more or less regard him as a man would wish to be regarded by a woman whom he dearly loved. This was a great deal more, indeed, than he had dared to believe, but then, as is usually the case in this imperfect world, where things but too often seem to be earefully arranged at sixes and sevens, came the other side of the shield. Of what use was it to him to have won this sweet woman's love; of what use to have put this pure water of lawful happiness to his lips in the desert land of his lonely life, in order to see the cup that held it shattered at a blow. To him the story of the money loan—in consideration of which, as it were, Ida had put he self in pawn, as the Egyptians used to put the mummies of their fathers in pawn—was almost incredible. To a person of his simple and honorable nature it seemed a preposterous and unheard of thing that any man calling himself a gentleman should find it possible to sink so low astotake such advantage of a woman's dire necessity and honorable desire to save her father from misery and her race from ruin, and to extract from her a promise of marriage in consideration of value received. Putting aside his overwhelming personal interest in the matter, it made his blood boil to think that such a thing could be. And yet it was, and what was more, he believed he knew Ida well enough to be convinced that she would not shirk the bargain. If Edward Cossey came forward to claim his bond it would be paid down to the last farthing. It was a question of £30,000; the happiness of his lif which he has done."

Harold Quaritch took a step back and looked at her in horrified astonishment.

"What?" he asked,

"Yes, yes," she answered, hastily, putting up her hand as though to shield herself from a blow. "I know what you mean but do not think to hardly of me if you can help it. It was not for myself. I would rather work for my living, with my hands than take a price, for there is no other word for it. It was for my father and my family too. I could not bear to think of the old place going to the hammer, and I did it all in a minute, without consideration; but," and she set her face, "even as things are, I believe I should do it again, because I think that no woman has a right to destroy her family in order to place begins."

Mrs. Mauger had suffered from masal catarrh until the bones as well as the tissues of her nose were all gone. In this condition she applied to Dr. K. to see if he could build a nose for her.

The doctor, by means of skillful surgical operations and the introduction of the breastbone of a chicken (for the bridge of the nose), gave Mrs. Mauger an organ of smell that she is proud of.

The advance in modern surgery is really astonishing, nor is the progress of modern medicine a whit less wonderful. There was a time when a doctor had but little hope of saving a patient who complained of restlessness, helplessness, feverish feelings, periodical headaches, dizziness, dimness of sight, ringing in the ears, difficulty in thinking and trouble in remembering the names of friends. There was not one chance in a hundred that this patient could be restored to permanent good health.

Now, however, a doctor, when his patient complains of these symptoms, recommends Paine's Celery Compound, knowing full well that the use of this scientific discovery will strengthen the weakened nerves and build up the failing forces of the brain. It will give good digestion, sound sleep and freedom from aches and pains. Soon the user will not only feel but look like a new person. With the perfect health given by this invigorator come elastic step, a clear brain, bright eye, rosy cheeks and steady nerves. This great discovery has done more to check the great evil of brain and nerve weakness than all other remedices known to the medical or scientific professions, and it is every day restoring men, women and hidden who was visitually dead to the

At Grand Rapids the other day, Ruel W. Boynton, the Muskegon attorney, convicted in the United States Court of demanding and accepting an illegal pension fee from a disabled veteran, was brought before Judge Severens for sentence. The court intimated that but for the age and infirmities of the attorney he should inflict a penalty embracing imprisonment. He conly inflicted a fine, however, of $375. Boynton having paid to the court the $125 taken from his client in excess of the legal fees. The respondent paid the fine.

The Pomona Land and Water Company was on Monday awarded a verdict in the United States Court, Detroit, for $79,819 30 against Henry M. Loud, of Oscoda. The suit arose upon a contract for the purchase by Mr. Loud of 26 lots of land from the Pomana Land and Water Company, in Pomona, Cal., near Los Angeles. The plaintiffs claimed that Mr. Loud bought the land and paid a certain price down on it, refusing to pay for the balance because property around Los Angeles, Cal., was 400 per cent. above par when it was contracted for, and afterwards fell to 80 per cent. below par. Mr. Loud contended that he purchased the property, which is valueless without artificial irrigation, with the understanding that should he so desire, the company would construct canals for the improvement of the land. This, he claimed, they failed to do, and he was left with his real estate on his hands and no means to water it.
