LONDON, MONDAY, AUG. 7.

The Old Boys.

The old boys are here. They are in is not too good to adorn their digits. All we who remain at home of whatever age, feel that we are the fathers of these "Old Boys," and not a jealous elder brother is among us.

The rejoicing of these family reunions is one of the purest and least calculating of all festivities. No scintilla of gain enters into it. When a church conference or synod or a trades union convention meets here we make the visitors welcome and show then the best side of our town, partly out of hospitality and partly, deep down, thinking that we are advertising our attractiveness to possible immigrants. But these old boys are our own. They have gone out from us and have sought and found their fortunes elsewhere. They are our own flesh and blood their triumphs won in every field are our triumphs, and they have come back to celebrate them with us. If we take them about it is not to point out a favorable factory site, but to revisit the old haunts where we played together (sometimes indeed to search in vain for them), to conjure up the spirit of our boyhood and to dream show the changes which we at home have wrought in the faces of nature and art since those old days. Graying hair and stiffering muscles are forgotten, with all the cares of business and household which infest the grownup day, and we enter again into the boyish sports which filled our young world-is it possible?-half a genera-/ A MA 4 456

When these boys from abroad leave us and return to their newer homes, hold of the plow handles once more, strenuous life of this work-aday world can quite smother out the rosy young light of the Old Boys' continent-wide custom this general quite new. In all ages there have his comment. been family reunions, when the boys and girls came home to the old fireside. In all ages the man who has gone abroad and succeeded has been willing to in some way exhibit that dence of it, in the old place where as a boy he had no particular honor. And in all ages parents have rejoiced to see their children again and neighbors have vied with each other to do honor to the son of their soil who has won distinction elsewhere and so con- hand as though it were a hocky stick, ferred immortality on the name of his birthplace. Who would have heard of has generally a pleasant whiff of hon-Stratford-on-Avon had he not first heard of Shakespeare, or of Tarsus but the sniggering miss. for Saul, or of Correggio, but for the painter Allegri, of Ayr but for Burns? To the general fame of this city we are fain to add the fame of her distinguished sons abroad. London has set the example and now for the first time in the days of man have we brought this affectionate home-coming and this pride and joy in the laurels gained outside by our sons and neighbors' sons to the occasion of a period of general co-operative rejoicing. Says

"Joy is an impost, joy is an exchange, It flies monopolies, it calls for two." If that late lamented poet were in London this week he would learn that practical and a theoretical farmer?" it calls for 40,000.

Probably the only historical parallel or something like parallel to these re- evitable an' turns the place over to unions was the great Passover Feast at Jerusalem. This was held annually, and it became virtually a reunion of the Judea and Galilee Old Boys. And it is not at all unlikely that a good many expatriated Samaritans and what we have two ears for, father? Moabites, to say nothing of Ishmaelites and Philistines took advantage of excursion rates to go and see their old folks too, and incidentally to take in ! the doings at Jerusalem's big annual fair. Certainly it appears that the Jews, dispersed abroad among a hundred Gentile nations, as often as possible, many of them annually returned to the villages or farmsteads of their their relatives in that great Old Boys' sel."

Citizens Were Proud of It.

Mr. Wilson told of the great pride felt by the citizens in their school and the large number of visitors from outside points who used to come and admire it. The midsummer examinations used to attract large crowds of adults who would assemble in the prettily-decorated rooms to hear the pupils give their recitations and dialogues. The pupils took the utmost pride in the pupils took the utmost pride in the school and spent much time beautifying the grounds and building with flower gardens, young trees, flags, evergreens, pictures and so forth.

CHICAGO NOT BEHIND

Band to Arrive This Morning.

All day Saturday and Sunday the London Old Boys of Chicago with their wives and families, straggled into London. The Londoners of the Windy City had their choice of something over 50 trains to reach their old home and they came by the G. T. R., C. P. Several hundred of them are in the city at present, and by noon fully 1,000 Chicagoans will be in London. The last of the delegation will arrive this morning. They are bringing with them the famous Seventy-first Regiment Band, which is said one of the finest military bands in the United States.

FROM FAR WINNIPEG.

Large Contingent Came Through on Special Train. The big special train from Winnipeg. bearing the main contingent of the Old Boys from the great west pulled

"There they are!" went up from many hungry throats — hungry, both for
