Confessions of a Movie Star

CHAPTER 18.—I CHAFE AT BEING CHAPERONED.

WILL it not for Rose Montillon, be perfectly nice to everybody. She can't have any preferences. She can't discriminate against anybody. She can't keep Rose out of my dressing-room if Rose chooses to come in. Neither can I, even if Rose does take up space and use up oxygen in hot weather.

And so far as I can see, Rose always has been very good to me. Never can I forget how kind she was in my first awful bump in the movies. Nobody ever arrived at stardom without shedding some tears. I shed a good many after my first appearance on a set.

My first make-up was all wrong. It cost the directors several hundred feet of celluloid. It meant retakes for the entire day and a lot of extras.

I was then an extra myself, brought in to play a large little long-lost daughter found at last by her equally dear long-lost mother. Therefore, I was in the middle of the picture, close to the star, most of the scene.

Now, the girls of the company had been horrid to me. "Jealous cats," Rose called them. Rose can say what she chooses, because as an actress she is in a class by herself and is indispensable. She is sure fire for anything from grande dame to a squaw.

As I have said, the girls told me how to make up, and they combined to play a serious joke upon me. A movie make-up isn't like that of a show-girl. Rouge photographs black. My instructors and tormentors advised me to put on quantities of color. I was much too pale, they said. As usual, I did my work well. I rubbed in so much red that I looked like a little Indian when the picture was projected.

The star—my play-mother—was furious. She hated retakes with a crowd. She said the director ought to have noticed me and washed my face for me. He didn't happen to, excellent director though he was.

The wasted film represented hours of labor by many people. I was convinced that my chance in the movie was lost forever.

Fairy Slippers Grace the Ball

Black and Silver Grey Favorites With Chaperone and Dubutant.

Stimbre in hue though the slippers may be, which, worn by fairy feet, weave in and out of the mazes of the dance at the Armistice night ball in the winter garden, Friday evening, Prince Charming will be fair to go up and down the world hunting for the fair ower if he chances to find one of the graceful bits of footwear for which the London shoe shops have been raided during the past week.

Muris has said "Black," and, however lightsome, airy and radiantly hued the frock to be worn, the first choice of debutant, sub-deb, and chaperone alike has been the black evening slipper. Running a close second for popularity is a real confection in silver grey satin or in suede. Occasionally the choice has fallen upon bronze, so durable and so perfect with certain color combinations. Cloth of gold and of silver have still proved favorites and requests have been made for white satin and kid, and, in some instances, slippers to match the gown.

Very jaunty, indeed, were green suede slippers with dull silver buckles which were seen in a shop window, whispering about the ball, no doubt, to a pair of bronze slippers, also harking back in style to Colonial days, and made festive with oval buckles of dull gold knobs, ringed about with tiny steel beads, centred with puffs of bronze-brown satin ribbon.

Absolutely irresistible are the black satin slippers, some of them plain, with a touch of steel beading, applied in a simple fashion around the top of the vamp and over the single strap. Sometimes there is the gaiety of an elaborated beading of silver and jet on the toe; sometimes a simple little band of silver fabric inset around the top, a treatment also noted on the fairy queen silver grey satin slippers.

Does my lady find satin slippers uncomfortable or unbecoming? Then she has chosen kid with a trifle of beading, or perhaps patent leather. Whatever the material, it is a fairly safe wager that the heels are Louis instead of French and that she will be able to promenade as gracefully as she dances at the Armistice night ball.

For the matron and maid who value the luxury of comfort there is a slipper that has proved almost surprisingly popular, the vamp of patent leather and quarter, heel and strap of suede. With so many new slippers to make their debut at the ball, the chances seem fairly good for Prince Charming to find the clue which will lead to the beautiful princess.

Cynthia Grey's Mail-Box

WANTS ADDRESSES.
Dear Miss Grey,—No doubt you will be surprised to hear from me. How does this weather suit you? I would like to have a few addresses, Miss Grey. I asked for some before, but I guess you neglected to send them. I have had some very good correspondents through the Mail-Box and have had one of the girls visiting me. I wish someone would start the book discussion again, as I found it quite interesting. I would like some more crochet patterns, if I may have some. By the way, can anyone let me know what became of Mills Frost. I think someone in the page will have his address, as his cousin sent it in during the war.

SUNBEAM.
If you will send a stamped addressed envelope repeating your requests, I will be pleased to send you addresses and some crochet patterns, and possibly by then we will have some news of Mills Frost.

WANTS ADDRESSES.
Dear Miss Grey.—The temptation is great to keep from writing real often when we see so many nice letters in the Mail-Box and when we get to know so many we look for their letters. Will you please find inclosed self-addressed and stamped envelope for a Lonesome Girl's address? Our sympathy goes out to the dear girl in this, her great sorrow, in the loss of her mother, and let us write her a "Home Kid" to our lovely old lady who always loves to read the letters and her birthday is on the 15th of December, 84 years old. We will call her Auntie Becca, and let all the Mail-Box writers remember her with just a little letter for that date. I will write Mother Pearl real soon. Mother of Three hasn't written for a long time and Fuzz Wuzz, hope you are all feeling brighter, have been looking for a letter from you. Please find inclosed a dime for the Children's Hospital fund, in close wishing you all a bright Thanksgiving.

JULY.
Am mailing you the addresses asked

Dear Miss Grey:
May I come back to your corner after being away for a long while? I would like to have helped with the quilt but I am the only one in our house to do the work and there are five men. I often wonder who Crippled Annie is and always think of her as the patient who was in Toronto hospital eleven months ago and occupied the second bed from me. Did many of the boxites go to the fall fair? I got first prize for our driver at three shows. I wonder if Indian Brave will copy "The Baggage Coach Ahead?"
