

Temperance Department.

FATHER, BRING HOME YOUR MONEY TO-NIGHT.

Ane To persuiz Song and Chorus Mrs M. A. Kidder

til. Father, dear Father, don't stay away late, Come home when your day a work iso er.
For Mother ii be watching for you at the gate,
Don't grieve her poor heart any more.

he's weary with sewing to keep as in bread, And her face is so haggard and white, For you know, Father doar, that we all must be fed.

Then bring home your money w-night!

thokis -- Then bring home your money to night

Oh tring home your money to-night!

I or you know, Father dear, that we all must he fed,

on bring home your money to-night

the old tavern keeper is rich, I all sure. His neres spread out far and wide, would Father, dear Facher, you know we are poor,

And needy, and hungry boride.

From t give him your hardly carned dollars, I pray, for the druks that will madden and blight, that is manliness turn from the tempter away,

And bring home your money to night!

Un Father, dear Father, don a stay away

Twill to Saturnay night as you know. The issuitful Saturth might dawn if you wait. And had as m somes and so

An trend in the painty, no comfort in store, And nothing to make our home tright, wood-bye now, dear Father, don't drink any

But bring home your money to night

MAKING - JOT IN HEAVEN" ST ELECTOR EIRE.

- Do look at Bossis Carter Shouldn't you

"Be look at Bessis varier. Shouldn't you think she would be ashamed of herself?"

"Why ashamed enquired Deacon Goodneth, both surprised and shocked at his daughter's strange remerk.

"But just look, pape." Lary Goodrich was standing by the window. "There goes her father, just as drunk as he can be, with ber father, just as drunk as he can be, with twenty or thirty boys hooting after him, and Bessis running for dear life. Now she has got bold of his arm. Oh, pans, isn't it dreadful for a moe girl like Bessie to make such a show

"What would you have Beene do?" the descon asked, in the war and measured tones which Lucy well understood.

"Why, I would have herstay at hom "Why, I would have her stay at home. As my sa she can't do any good, what is the use

"How do you know she can do no good?"
"Why, paps, that man is perfectly senseless."

"So much the more need of his daughter's

"But folks talk droadfally about Be papa, for deeng these things, and the whole town seems to look down on her own seems to look down on her "

And God tooks down upon her, my child, and blesses her Last Sunday, Lacy. Resnie's salbath-school tessen contained this resus; There is jay in Heaven over one sinns repenteds, more than over ninety-nine just men, who need no repentance. She is the test scholar I have, and I assure you I was not a little surjeted, when it was her turn to recite, that she heutated, and finally lenks down comparing to heretated, and finally looks down comparing "Shall I pass to the next, Here I saked, the no please don't she solded "I will say it in a minute." Then she would

Data she wiped her eyes and commemond, at she hadn't got half through the rece be foreshe was in team again. Finally Oh, Deacon Goodnoh, if this is tra Finally abe said amow it is, how hard we ought to try to less

"I knew, Lucy, that the poor child was thinking of her father, and was not surprised when we passed out of the treatry to have her stend to my side and say." Flence, Dascon recoderly, don't forget to pray for my dest forler."

father."
"What did you say?" enquired Locy, her

rym fall of team

"I told her that I would not, and asked her if she was weeping became of discouragement. hald she "I don't know I am very much discouraged, and I am very happy to; perhaps you can't understand this. It seems to me, Descon Goodrich, I could be willing to die to-morrow if I knew that my father could make such joy in heaven as that we read about to-day."

auch joy in heaven as that we read about day."

"Oh, papa," said Lucy, springing into her father's arms, "I hope you encouraged her."

"I did what I could, you may be sure," was the quiet answer. "And I was very careful to try and make her feel that her father's intemperance could by no possibility diagrace her. She is a brave, whole-sould little girl, and her heart is filled with the love of Cod. It passeth understanding surely; for dear little Bessie could hardly comprehend the reasons for her deep joy in the midst of such great cause for scrow

That afternoon Deaven Goodrich's family went into the woods for a pio-nic. It was a lovely day in midsummer. All nature seemed went into the woods for a pio-nic. It was a lovely day in midsummer. All nature seemed to rejoice, and Lucy with a number of young friends, was full of the spirit of pleasure. Looy would have invited Bessie had she not known it was impossible for her to accept the invitation; but the conversation of the mora-inc had not a deep impression much beginned. ing had made a deep impression upon her se her wise father had determined it sh se her wise father had determined it should.

Lucy would not be upt to speak of "diagrace" again in the connection is which she had used it in this long-to-be-remembered interview.
The sum was going down behind the trees in the grand old woods. Ten was over, and the besletch had all been packed. The twilight would be a long one, and Descon Goodrich proposed that they should enjoy the very last bit of daylight before starting for home. "I wonder who it can be over there in the

"I wonder who it can be over there in the meadow beyond the stone wall?" Lucy had saked from the swing. "They have been there ever since we came. I have seen them lots of times. It looks, pape, as if there was a man sink ever there." The descon strolled: off in the dimension indicated. lots of times. It looks, pape, self there was a man sink ever there." The descen strolled: off in the direction indicated, and Lucy.jumped from the swing and joined him. As they drew mearer, the figure of a man tying on the grass was plainly seen. His head lay in the lap of a young girl, who was so absorbed with her charge that she did not notice their sportsools. prosob.
"It is Bo

proach.

"It is Bessie and her father, whispered Lney. "Oh, page, isn't it dreading?

The descent put up his finger warningly. Bessie was praying. Descent the dread of a good afterwards that he had listened to a good many propess in his day, but he cought he could makely say what this was a first rest prayer of faith he ever hard.

The value and manner were full of a confidence the value and manner were full of a confidence the value and manner were full of a confidence the confidence that the value and manner were full of a confidence that the value and manner were full of a confidence that the value and manner were full of a confidence that the value and manner were full of a confidence that the value and the confidence that the confi preyer of faith he ever heard. The vector preyer of faith he ever heard manner were fail of a confidence that God would answer, and that immediately. An occurrence alternal grown attented that the subject of the spiritual alive to his spiritual would answer, and that immediately. An oc-cational groan attested that the subject of this petition was beenly alive to his spiritual necessities. The prayer cases: Descon Goodrich's cheery voice rang led a clear Amen, and Bessie locked up into the face of her much loved Sabbath-school teacher.

"Then this is a prayer-meeting, is it, Mr Carter? Glorious place for it? No walls built by men between God and our own con-sciences," and the descon put the sufferer at

"That's just it," grouned the poor man.
"That's just it," grouned the poor man.
"It seems to me that my whole soul is laid
"It seems to me that my whole soul is laid
"The searching gaze. I never felt so bare to His searching gaze. I never felt so strongely before. Bessie has been talking to me about Heaven, trying to describe to me how happy the angels are when a size such as I repeats of his sin."

"And mother is among the angels know," said Bessie softly, as she to carressed the scarred and blosted face.

"And I broke her heart. No, mo, Bessio don't talk nonsense." There may be hope for some drumkards, but there's nesse for me!" and the awakened sinner turned his head sway, and scalding tears fell upon Be "But, father dest," broke in the faithful daughter, her face all aglow, "this is the way it is the greater the samer, the greater the loy. It seems to me I can hear them singing joj (th' mother, dear mother, bely my poo

"Let me pray," said Descon Goodrich with onivering voice.

When the good man arcse from his kness
the tettering figure of the drenkard confront ed him.

"With God's help"—he burst ont, seizing the denous's hand, "I will server touch asother drop of liquor. I never broke a promise yet, Denous Goodrich," and lifting his eyes reversally, "He will help me to keep this one, Bessie," imming to his daughter. "seems to me I can hear your mother's voice too, oh, there he joy in danyen over a sinuse that repeateth."

That victory was complete.

That victory was complete.

The discon and Mr. Carter walled home arm in srm, Besie and Lucy fellowing. Fellowing states at they saw Descen Gookish in such close companisoship with a noted instrict: but wooder turned into consideration, when Mr. Carter took his proper place among remertable sum. respectable men.
"It was very discouraging," said Bessis to Lucy, "sometimes; but I believed in 10d,

RENEGADES FROM TEETOTALISM. Those who have been moderate men all their life are often quite content with saying that every man must be fully persuaded in his own mizd: and some of them are frank enough own mizd: and some of them are frank enough to own that elatinence is a good thing. But the runegade tectotaler must be controversial, and must prove that shatinence is altogether an error, and that a little wine is really need-ed for the stomach's aske. In his youthful el for the stomach's sake. In his youthful zeal, he says, he played ascetic, but is now reformed, and is living as a sensible man ought to live, in the enjoyment of his creature comforts; and he would advise every testotaler to do as he has done! As a rule, perverts are very zealous propagandists, and especially when interest or appetite is involved. This the anti-tectotal zeal of the renegade is therefore the research who remarks we have the anti-tectotal zeal of the renegade is there-fore the passion of the pervert, who nomehow or other just seems to think that it is his special mission to destroy what he formerly advocate, and practised. In this way much damage is done to our cause. Many are prevented from joining it, and army are withdrawn from it. But the influence of the example of the renegade, apart from any active effort, operates, and very nonwefully too, in the same direction.

and very powerfully too, in the same direction. Weak-kneed testotalers, and we have such in our ranks, begin to my with themselves, se-pecially when the renegade is a minister, "Look at Mr. or Dr. se and so, a godly man, an able prescher, and a scholar. He has "Look at Mr. or Dr. se and so, a godly man, an able prescher, and a scholar. He has given up his tectothism. We have heard him preach cloquestly on its behalf; and perhaps few men ever spoke more strongly against the dangers of moderate-drinking than he did. And yet there he is again among the mederate drinkers! We may depend upon it that it is not without good reason he hearstermed to them. We are quite sure that no neworthy motive have accused him, and that he is really convinced that moderate drinking is no necessary feeder of intemperance, and that testetalism is not required for its prevention, whatever may be its value in individual cases as a cure." Arguing with themselves in this way, they very malwelly conclude that there is no narticular reason why they, any more than fa, should adhere in their pledge, and accordingly they follow his example, and withdraw from among us.

We are not indulging here in more supposition. We have a case now before me where the withdrawal of a minister from his abstinated all several to follow his example, some of whom such into those very intemperate habits against which their abstinence was their sufeguard. We do not know that he is converent with these facts. It is quite possible that he may be living in the belief that some was thus injured; but there were less eyes watching, and they saw these results.—Lesgue Journel.

"IT KEEPS OUT THE COLD."

This is one of the most prevalent of the fal-lacies concerning alcohol. Treassters, soldiers, sailors, travellers and all sorts of people be-lieve this very largely, and practice according-ly. Many a pledge has been broken, many an appetize formed, many a drunkerd made in this way; for the alcohol produces its legiti-mate effects just as surely when used for this purpose, as for any other.

The results of the use of alcohol for this purpose give an excellent illustration of its dessitful effect on the nerves. The rapidity of the sirenistion is increased, and the temper-densitied effect on the nerves. The improvey of the sireulation is increased, and the temperature at the surface rises alightly, perhaps half a degree. But this is in consequence of throwing out and wasting the vital forces and not from any increase of vital heat. The tenth is that a thermometer properly placed, where a little denotes a decrease in temperature arms a name owners a necrose in temperature of one, two, three, or more degrees, socreting to the amount of vitality wested, down even to death itself, and that requires but a few degrees of reduction.

my or reduction.

But now observe the sensations through the stree. They report the first alight rise in separature with some correctness, hence the ing that alcohol "war not simultaneously wil Almost simulation of warms up the system. Almost simulation of warms up the system. Almost simulation or warms up the system. Almost simulation with this they are bessented by the slookel, and their function suspended to such a degree that they do not report correctly the subsequent condition of the system, and the man cannot tell by his feelings how cold the system is. Besides this Seelings how cold the system is. Besides this it destroys the equilibrium of the circulation, and makes him more liable to freeze than he would without it.

and I was sure if I did my part, just as I was told, that He would do His. Oh! Lucy; over a long period. Sir John Rose, think of the joy there is in Heaven now."

Lucy did think, but she could not speak for her tears.—Congregationalist expections to the security regions was considered indispensable, because so well satisfied that it was injurious that he proposed to his mon to give up the use of sleehol, which they did with great advantage. Dr. Alkin ascrites the failure of several unsuccessful ascrites the failure of several unsuccessful ascrites the failure of several unsuccessful the months of sleehold. they did with great advantage. 197. Alter assertles the failure of several massecessful Northern expeditions to the me of alcoholic liquous, while these who drank nothing but water had better health, and were more seccesful. He tells of a Daniah crew of sixty men, well provisioned and supplied with spirits, which attempted to spend the winter in Hudson's Ray, and all but two of them died; while an English crew of twenty-two, doing the same without spirits, all lived but two. In another case eight Englishmen without spirits all survived, while four Russians, left in Spitzbergen without provisions or spirits, all lived for six years, and were eventually restored to their homes. A large proportion of whaling and exploring expeditions are now fitted out without spirit rations.

Three or four years ago a company of twenty-six Americans, travalling on a western plain, were obliged to camp out without a fire

Three or four years ago a company of twenty-six Americans, travelling on a western plain, were obliged to camp out without a fire in very cold weather. They had good supplies of all sorte, and an abundance of whiskey. One of their number, somewhat read up on the subject, cautioned them strongly against the use of the latter. Two of them heeded his words, and with himself drenk no whiskey. They were cold, but did not suffer severely, nor freeze. They all wrapped up, and clustered together in groups as well as they could. Three others drame a little, and suffered much, but did not freeze. Sereu others who drank more, had their toes and fingers frosted. Six drank much, and were so hadly frozen that they never fully recovered. Four drank to booriness, and were so much injured that they died in three or feur weeks afterwards, while the remaining three who drank themselves dead drunk, ware frozen stiff in the apening. They were all men in the prime of life, and were all equally wall provided with blankets and clothing. The experiment was as near conclusive as it could well be made, the greatest difference being in the quantity of liquor used. The suffering was, apparently, in exact proportion to the quantity drank. The details of the case were published at the time in a Giocimati medical journal, being communicated by this member was, apparently, in exact proquentity drank. The details of published at the nime in a Car published at the time in a Cincinsati medical journal, being communicated by this member of the party who warned his associates against the poison. If we had such intelligent men everywhere, to notice facts and results, and press these apon the attention of the people, we would exen get rid of this fallery, and strike a heavy blow at the vitals of King Alcohol.—Zion's Herald. d by this me

REGULAR SOLEIKO WORSE THEN IRREGULAR REGULAR SOLKING WORK TREN IRREGULAR CAROUSLYS.—In his recently published Clinical Lectures, referring to the dangers involved in operating upon habitual drinkers, Sir James Paget, an eminent English physician and surgeon, says "One does, indeed, sometimes meet with habitual drunkerds who and surgeon, says "One does, indeed, sometimes meet with habitaal drankards who pass safely through the partis of great operations; but then, are rare exceptions to the rule, according to which one may recion that the risks of all operations increases with the increasing degrees of habitaal intemperance. I think you will find that a habit of slight intemperance is much worse than occasional great _leeses, that regular scaking is worse than irregular occounting, probably became of the steady impairment of the bloed and of all the textures to which the scaking leads. Of course you will keep your heads of notorious drunkards, unless you are driven by the stress of a strangulated hearis, or a stopped windpips, or strangulated hearis, or a stopped windpips, or scenething leaving you as little choice as these do. But you must be on your guard to detect a good deal of drunksenses of the scaking kind, which is not notorious and not confessed. Be rather similed of operating on those of whatever class, who think they need stimulants before they work, who cannot dise until after wine and bitters; who always have sheary on the sideboard, or who are always stepping brandy-and-water, or are rather proud that, became they can set so little, they must often take some a fine. Many people who pass for highly , sepectable, and who mean no harm, are thus daily demeging their health, and making themselves until to hear any of the storms of life."

—A writer in a recent number of the Louden Freezes mays "A great number of making —A writer in a recent number of the Loc-den Frances mays "A great number of smokurs seem to have lost night of politoness! Their smoking makes them rade. Why should a macking makes them rude. Why she macket blow his smales in my face, or the dust of his weed to fly in my syes; at ruld he think it not indepent frequen er allow aly to expectants in my presence? I have no much right to contier the strong paper and helf-blind the passwaby or my compenions in a railway carriage. I might masser it pleased mes! I bere no m would without it.

This is a fair specimen of the deceits of alcohol. It is a serve poison, and that fact assessment for meany of the erroneous opinions about its effects. It explains why the popular impression which leads people to drick, conflicts with the results of careful scientific experiments and observations. The latter are but little known to the people. The results of speciments and observations. The results of public smokers, however, break this law, and some of the latest we have given above, in the indications of the thermometer. The observations who hate the most distant times of tobacco."