In all probability a sturdy British labor-er will have the honor of turning the first sod, under the direction of T. T. Black, engineer in charge for the con-tors. Quinlan and Robertson. Men have been busy during the past work, holsting engines and pumps, and erecting derricks, but tomorrow morning excavation work for the piers will be begun. Pier D, as it is specifi-ed on the plans, between the C. N. R. tracks and the Don, will be started first and about 50 men will be employed ed excavating for the foundation. In two weeks excavation will be started for pierC, which is to be built imme-diately east of the river, and from that time on the number of men re-quired will increase daily. Several carpenters are at work building store-rooms and workshops on the west bank of the Don. Mr. Black stated that the deepest foundation would be about 48 feet and that during the next three months the bulk of the work would be under-ground, and it would be well into the spring before the observer would be able to see work above ground. "Great care will have to be taken in making the foundation for the pier which will stand in the middle of the river," he said. "The water would soon destroy our work if not kept in hand, and day and night shifts will be kept on to get the foundation in quickly." "Have you many applicants for work?" the engineer was asked. "It is surprising the men we have applying for timekeepers' jobs and clerical work, but there are not so many of the laboring class; they will be coming along in hundreds just as soon as the work begins."
