

nt—
h st.
st.
arles

SUPPLEMENTARY ADVERTISEMENT.

ANY apology for errors in the preceding Directory might stamp it with inefficacy, which would totally destroy the object of the compiler in publishing it.—Laborious and expensive as such an undertaking is known to be. it would nevertheless ill become any man to palm upon the public a work in which the utmost effort had not been used to make it perfect ; and which he did not conscientiously think was likely to produce a public good. It unquestionably required considerable hardihood to attempt the object of this publication, where not a single house in the town was numbered, and where many persons would (from prejudice it might be imagined to every species of improvement) refuse the information required for it. The compiler of the present work, although aware of