

sabbath-breaking, too often escape the just punishment of the law; and no native British subject, I am persuaded, can be acquainted with the island twelve months and be ignorant of the truth of this assertion. In this beautiful and delightful spot, where nature has provided so admirably for its protection and defence, is justice to be withheld? Time alone will prove how far insults have been directed, injuries inflicted, and injustice practised, upon a numerous people, subjects of His Majesty.

That Jersey was once honoured with the presence of the Justices from Westminster Hall has been clearly proved, and also that England has the exclusive right of giving it a government and laws. That it again may witness that honour, is, I am persuaded, the anxious wish of every lover of truth and justice now residing in the island.

A RESIDENT.
