

Has Effort to Curb U. S. Steel Failed to Satisfy Public?

Stanley Report Which Rejects Plan of Federal Control of Prices and Wages and Seeks to Prevent Unlawful Restraint of Trade by Elaborate Process, Causing Much Comment.

NEW YORK, July 25.—(Special).—The report of the Stanley committee of the house of representatives, which has been investigating the steel trust, has been the principal theme discussed here to-day in political and financial circles. Chairman Stanley reports against having the government regulate prices and wages, altho the steel company would not object to such legislation. He attempts to shore up the Sherman Act by a bill proposing many amendments to the act. These amendments define many specific acts as proof of unlawful restraint of trade, such as bribery of a competitor's employee, selling below cost, contracting with customers not to sell to competitors, discriminating between customers, giving away goods or selling at slaughter prices to competitors out of the field, controlling unduly raw material or machinery necessary to any business. Thus, for the steel company to own 30 per cent. of the iron ore of the United States becomes, as a matter of law, a restraint of trade.

Other provisions allow any state or individual to intervene in any suit for injunction or dissolution brought against an alleged trust by the federal government, either before or after judgment, and by cross-petition try out any claim for damages they may have against the trust. In all civil suits the burden of proof will be shifted so that the company will have to justify any restrictive trade as not being unreasonable.

Finally, upon a judgment dissolving the merger, all constituent companies may be forbidden to own stock in the property of the trust, and, where the property of the dissolved merger is necessary for carrying on the business of competitors, the trust may acquire the same to be sold in reasonable quantities at a price to be fixed by the court. This clause would affect the United Shoe Machine Co., which can put any shoe manufacturer out of business, by withdrawing its machines from his factory.

Other bills to be introduced forbid any steel company or coal company to own stock in a railway company, or a railway company to own stock in them, and interlocking direct rates between such companies are forbidden.

Condensed as Weak.

The New York American condemns the proposed legislation as weak and ineffective. It calls for government regulation of trusts much in accord with the ideas of Mr. Roosevelt. A big broadside editorial opens thus: The Stanley committee of congress has spent two years trying to find out what should be done to the trusts. It has come to the lame and impotent conclusion that "the control of corporations by the federal government, as recommended by Mr. Carnegie, Judge Gary and others is a semi-Socialistic in its nature and beyond the power invested by the constitution in congress."

The idea that the great corporations must in the end submit to reasonable and effective control by the government in the public interest, was not Mr. Carnegie's idea, nor Judge Gary's, and it is not semi-Socialistic.

The idea was very definitely and briefly stated in a signed editorial by William Randolph Hearst more than 12 years ago—on June 6, 1899—when he said:

"The trust is a labor-saving device than can lower the cost of production. The trust is also a great power which can raise the price of its commodities, rob its weaker rivals, corrupt legislatures and oppress the public. These evils of the trust should be made criminal and adequately punished. The trust should be regulated, restricted, but they should not be destroyed. And, what is more, they cannot be destroyed."

These are the greatest trusts in the United States have been convicted in the federal courts in the past five years of the trust Mr. Hearst predicted 12 years ago, namely, "raising the prices of commodities, robbing weaker rivals, corrupting legislatures, and oppressing the public." These evils are now universally admitted. But they have never been adequately punished. The punitive power of justice has been shown to be weak. The criminal clause of the anti-trust law has been robbed of its sting. A mandate of dissolution from the highest court in the United States has not deprived the offending trust either of its profits or its dismembered parts. It has been found impossible to "unscramble an egg." Mr. Morgan's happy phrase, the omelet has been divided into many parts, and in the process the market value of the whole has been increased.

Chairman Stanley's idea of limiting the power of trusts by putting an arbitrary limit upon the amount of business that any corporation shall do, is not practicable and is not new. It is one of Mr. Bryan's favorite and extreme fads, suggested by him four years ago and discarded by everybody as silly, and finally abandoned even by him.

Opens Door to Litigation.

DON MILLS ROAD.

Editor World: Why do the citizens of Don Mills-road (or that portion in the city) not insist on the immediate construction of the permanent pavement already ordered? Things are moving on Danforth-ave., and if Don Mills-road wishes to get some of the benefit of the new viaduct across the road they had better have as good a road as the other street is now getting. Don Mills-road can sit back and let Danforth get everything, or it can make a move for a pavement. Why not widen the Don Mills-road to the width of Danforth-ave.? That is the thing to do. But the first thing is to organize a Don Mills Ratepayers' Improvement Club like they have in Riverview. Booster.

Queen Mary's Lucky Dog

King George, Queen Mary, and Nearly All Foreign Monarchs Wear Mascots to Bring Them Luck.

Most people possess a mascot of some kind or other to which they pin their faith. Royalty is no exception to the rule.

King George's favorite mascot is said to be a motor one. A little brass figure of Britannia, with a crown in her outstretched hands, and at her feet a crouching lion. This figure, which is only four inches in height, is placed upon the radiator of the King's car.

Queen Mary is not very superstitious, but still she possesses one or two charms for which she has a great liking. One of these, that she wears on a bangle, is a little ivory dog given her many years ago.

The Kaiser possesses a ring which he wears at all times, and looks upon as his own peculiar talisman. There is a curious superstitious history attached to this ring, which makes it all the more valuable in the sight of the Emperor. In the time of the Elector John of Brandenburg, one of the Kaiser's ancestors, a load entered his room and left a small stone on the bed.

This stone was of no particular value, but ever since then it has been treasured by the Hohenzollerns.

The Tsar's Piece of the Cross.

The Tsar of Russia possesses a ring in which is embedded a piece of the true cross. He will never under any circumstances move about without this mascot, which, like the Kaiser's, is supposed to shield its wearer from harm. He is also the possessor of a valuable gold watch which is wound more regularly than most watches. There is a saying that whenever the watch stops some misfortune overtakes the Russian royal family.

One of the grimmest of mascots is the famous opal ring of the royal house of Spain. This ring was given to Alfonso XII by the Countess de Castiglione. At the time Alfonso was in exile, and he promised the Countess that if he ever came to the throne he would marry her. When he became King of Spain, however, he married the Princess Mercedes, incurring the wrath of the discarded Countess.

She pretended to be pleased, and sent the King a beautiful opal ring. The Princess Mercedes was so enchanted with the present that she asked her husband to let her wear it. A few months afterwards she was dead. In his own peculiar talk, Alfonso was a curious superstitious history attached to this ring, which makes it all the more valuable in the sight of the Emperor. In the time of the Elector John of Brandenburg, one of the Kaiser's ancestors, a load entered his room and left a small stone on the bed.

The King himself then wore it, and he was dead in less than a year. After this Queen Christina had it placed on a gold chain and hung round the neck of the statue of the Virgin of Alameda of Madrid, which is located in the frequent parks.

Valuable as the ring is, and easy of access as it is, the greatest thief in Spain would never attempt to steal it.

The mascot of the Kings of Italy is a closed room! It is believed that the greatest misfortune will overtake the King if the favorite room of his two generations is touched till at least two generations have passed. For this reason the room of the late King Humbert, the room of the Quirinal, is closed. Only members of the royal family are allowed to enter it.

Even the great Napoleon had his superstitions. In his possession was a mascot which he looked upon as a
