

NURSE CREIGHTON'S STORY

Some Facts Concerning the Ravages of White Plague in Toronto That Should Appeal to the Public's Sympathy.

To World Readers:

In our four consumptive homes there are 24 nurses, who day and night minister to the 315 suffering ones in these institutions.

In addition to these 24 resident nurses, the trustees have employed a visiting nurse (Nurse Creighton), who looks after poor consumptives in their homes, supplying them with the care and comforts they would otherwise go without. The scenes of suffering and poverty that daily confront her would be a revelation to many, and we believe that if the readers of The World could accompany Nurse Creighton in her rounds, all the needed money for our hospitals would be quickly forthcoming.

Miss Creighton is a Canadian graduate nurse and always reports to our hospital boards in a plain, straightforward way, without any attempt at sensationalism.

She spent a year in the White Chapel District, London, before taking up her work in connection with our consumptive homes, and has reported to the trustees that the misery and suffering found in Toronto is as great as that in the east end of London, though, of course, not as extensive or widespread.

The following are extracts from her report:

"I was called in to visit the young Scotchman who had been lying ill with tuberculosis for almost two years. He shared a basement room with two others—his mother (a widow) supported herself and her family by taking boarders, and said she could not give her boy the food and care he required—in fact, they often went hungry."

"Yesterday I visited a family on Eastern-avenue. The mother died of consumption in the Toronto Free Hospital for Consumptives last summer. The baby (a year and a half old) is out there now very ill with the same trouble. The father is out of work thru ill-health, and the old grandmother tries to keep herself and two other little children on what she earns sewing. The house they live in is in an awfully dilapidated condition, and when the very cold weather comes, they will suffer intensely, as even with fuel it would be impossible to keep it warm."

The board of trustees, in their efforts to lessen the sorrow and suffering of such cases as are described by Nurse Creighton and revealed in letters coming from all parts of Canada, have piled up a bank overdraft of $60,000.00 in Toronto and Muskoka, believing that generous-hearted people of this city and the province would help to take care of the financial burden.

At this Christmas time, when so many fathers and mothers are planning pleasant surprises for their loved ones, cannot something be spared for Nurse Creighton's young Scotchman and the motherless baby of a year and a half old, and the 175 sick ones, now in our consumptive homes, who are unable to pay anything towards the cost of their maintenance, and whom other hospitals do not want to receive, for fear of contagion?

$300 will endow a bed for a year. $1.00 will help. Will you?

Yours, faithfully,

H. P. Gage
