His Mission in Music Explained by Sousa

Famous Bandmaster Asserts He Uses Popular Music as Means to Educate the People to Demand More Classic Art.

John Philip Sousa, the bandmaster, was recently asked by an interviewer for the Philadelphia Record, why he devoted so much time and energy to the writing of popular music and its presentation. Said he in reply: "Washington, in my boyhood, was a vast military camp, and martial music filled the air day and night. It took hold of me, as it did everybody else. I early perceived that such music, if closely allied in nature and effect to folk songs and dance tunes; that the universal heart responded easily and always to the simple in art. "Home, love, joy, sorrow, patriotism, instantaneous conviction and power were discernible in this spectacle of what might be called cradle songs—the music of childhood. It seemed to me, in my early life, that the principles of this type of music might be so far elevated and utilized as to reach the world directly and effectively.

"It occurred to me that the foundations of all music might be so far elevated and utilized as to reach the world directly and effectively. It occurred to me that the foundations of all music might be so far elevated and utilized as to reach the world directly and effectively.
