La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

Missing Relic of Saint Margaret of Scotland—Marriage of the Duc de Brissac to Widowed Baroness

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.)

Princess Zita of Bourbon-Parma, daughter of the late of the sovereign Duke of Parma, and who became an Austrian archduchess last week through her marriage to Archduke Charles Francis, heir presumptive to the Austrian throne, takes her name from the one kitchener who has ever been canonized and received a place in the calendar of Saints. In fact, Saint Zita, the patron saint of all scullerymaids and general house servants. When the now widowed Duchess of Parma insisted upon giving the name of Zita to that daughter of hers who will in the course of time become Empress of Austria, Queen of Hungary and Bohemia, as well as titular Queen of Jerusalem, she wished to imply that her child would be at all times a servant of the humblest kind of the church.

Missing Relic

Collectors in all parts of the civilized world are being appealed to for information as to the whereabouts of a silver casket, adorned with jewels, and containing the heart of Saint Margaret of Scotland, Queen of Malcolm III. At the time of her canonization, the heart was removed from the body, and enclosed in a silver casket, the contents of which were placed in the hands of the Jesuits, and taken to Rome. It was there deposited in the church of the Holy Spirit, and remained in that place until 1877, when it was given in charge of the Jesuits, and taken to Rome. The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

"I DON'T see how I ever shall stand the cold weather. I actually had all the bed clothes that I use in winter on my bed last night and I was hardly warm enough!"

The speaker held out her hands to the open fire and shivered as if it were January instead of October.

"That," said the lady-who-always-knows-something, "is what everyone says every year. You hear more complaining of the cold weather in the first cold snap of the fall, than you do on the coldest day in midwinter. It's all in getting used to it, I think. When I find myself wondering in the fall how I'm going to stand the cold, I always remind myself that I got used to the cold, I didn't mind it a bit and even liked it."

How much "getting used to it" does have to do with standing the cold weather? Incidentally, many other things.

When the first cold snap comes, those of us who are not by nature cold weather fiends, shiver in our boots and say something like the complaint I quoted at the beginning.

But by the time the real cold weather has come we have forgotten all about our inability to endure it. We just take it as a matter-of-fact or even enjoy it once we "get used to it."

And how many changes, how many unbecome conditions, how many difficult situations which at first we do not see how we can endure, are likewise metamorphosed by the slow magic of "getting used to it."

The Duc de Brissac's marriage with the late Baroness of L'Espée, daughter of the late Comte de Beaufort, will take place on November 21 next at the Hotel de Ville in Paris. The Duc de Brissac is now in New York, and is bound to attract some attention on this side of the Atlantic. On the occasion of the late Comte de Brissac's visit to the States to attend the wedding of his only brother, the late Duc de Chaulnes, to Miss Theodora Shonts in New York, she was called back to France in a hurry by the grave illness of her husband's sister, the late Duchesse de Brissac. That lady died in New York, and her husband, the Duc de Chaulnes, but also for her sister-in-law, the Duchesse de Brissac, to whom she was very attached.

The Duc de Brissac, who is a man of about forty-three, has four children. The eldest, Roland, Marquis de Brissac, is a little more than twelve years of age. He was formerly an officer of the Imperial Guard, and on more than one occasion commanded the mounted escort of the late Comte de Brissac. He is now in the place of Ambassador Lelshman's French-in-law, the late Comte de Fontenay-Bron, master of the Hotel de Ville.

"While, on the side of his father, which was killed in the Franco-German war of 1870-71, he is of the most illustrious character, his lineage on his mother's side is quite the reverse of that. She married her son's father before he succeeded to the dukedom, and after her death became the wife of a man whose death became the cause of her divorce in 1888, losing thereby her right to use the name of Brissac, being now known in law as "Madame Jeanne Say." She is the sister of the great French sugar refiner, the late Henri Say, who has many relatives on this side of the Atlantic.

The present Duc de Brissac is the oldest son of the late Duc de Brissac, and was created in the late Comte de Brissac's direct line from that enormously fat Duc de Brissac, who was the French nation is indebted for having the pleadings in the late Comte de Brissac's case as well as the judgment delivered in the case, delivered in the name of the late Duc de Brissac, as had been the case previous to his time.

It seems that the Duc de Brissac, who was popularly known as "Le Gros Brissac," had ridden all the way from Paris to Boston, just in time to hear the judges deliver their judgment against him, with the Latin words "debotat dictum." These at any rate were the only words which he heard. Furious, he returned to Paris, and on arriving there complained bitterly to the King of the impertinence of his judges. "Why, what have they done to you, my poor Brissac?" inquired the monarch.

"They have condemned me to lose my boots!"

"Your boots?" inquired the King in astonishment.

"They used the expression 'debotat dictum,' and I should like to know what else that can mean!" (The French "debotat" means, to take off the shoes.)

"There was a shout of laughter on the part of His Majesty and of those present and it was with difficulty that the real meaning of the expression was made clear to the Duke.

"Why could not they tell me that my suit had been rejected in plain French, instead of their cursed Latin?" he cried.

"You are quite right, Brissac," exclaimed the King. "Henceforth if you are subjected to a 'debotat,' it shall be in French."

From that time forth all the judgments of the French courts of justice have been delivered in the vernacular.

ZAM-BUK CURED HIS SORES

Cure Also Chapped Hands And Chilblains

Mr. Chas. Hardy, of 558 Home Street, Winnipeg, says:—"My eldest son has proved the value of Zam-Buk and we would not be without a supply in the house. He had both ears so badly frozen that we became alarmed for fear they should have to be amputated. His ears were swollen to several times their usual size, and were very much discolored. Large blisters formed and then burst and painful sores on both ears resulted. The sores were scalded, scales formed and the boy suffered terribly."

"The preparation which we at first used were found next to useless, in fact the wounds grew steadily worse, so we then tried Zam-Buk and found a great improvement in one or two applications."

"We continued with this herbal balm until the sores were healed, and the ears cleared away thoroughly, and suffering in a week from the use of this excellent balm. He is now almost well again. In six weeks you would never have known his ears had been frozen, so well had Zam-Buk brought about healing."

Here is but one illustration out of scores how superior Zam-Buk is to other salves. It also cures chapped hands, chilblains, scabs, inflamed sores, eczema, ring-worm, scalp sores, ulcers, abscesses, blood-poison, sores on the neck, and all skin diseases and diseases. On account of its purity and its herbal composition it is the ideal balm for babies and young children.

SAY KAISER HAS MADE A BLUNDER

Criticism of Remarks He is Said to Have Made About Islamism

Berlin, Nov 2—The Kaiser has again brought himself into conflict with a section of his subjects by an indiscreet utterance while conversing with Bishop Mensch, head of the German Catholic missions in East Africa. The Kaiser said that the menace of Islam's religion was endangering the German colonies, and that energetic missionary work must be done to counteract the evil. He added that he was pleased that the missionaries were teaching the natives to work. It was necessary to teach them religion, but it was not necessary to turn them into fanatics.

Wilhelm's condemnation of Islamism was printed in the leading Catholic newspapers, and has drawn severe criticism from other papers, which declare that it was a short-sighted blunder likely to undo all the good that has been done by the German diplomats in recent years trying to gain the confidence of the Ottoman Empire, which work some time ago caused the Kaiser to be hailed as "The Protector of Islam."

The incident is condemned as particularly tactless in view of the war between Italy and Turkey.

This is for the reason that popular sympathy in Germany is strongly on the side of Turkey. It is not surprising, therefore, that a semi-official signal was issued, asserting that the Kaiser had not said that the Mohammedans were likely to endanger the German colonies, but that the real zeal of the Mohammedans was mentioned in conversation, the emperor expressed his conviction that German missions would not fail to carry out their work with equal energy and in accordance with the missionaries of Islam.

How Nervous Men Get Most Out of Life

(From "Successful Men.")

Every normal minded man wishes to be successful in life—but many are not successful that he is falling far short.

It is not a successful man, works, eats and plays with the keenest enjoyment, because his nerves are keenly sensitive. He tastes, hears, sees and feels all with the highest emotions of vigorous healthy nerves. As a consequence he has stamina, endurance and personal magnetism, which makes those near and dear to him, worship his manliness, chivalry and strenuousness.

Without keen, sensitive, well nourished nerves, such a man would be an object of pity, and not the brilliant success he is. All men should have well-nourished nerves, and feel all with the highest emotions of vigorous healthy nerves. As a consequence he has stamina, endurance and personal magnetism, which makes those near and dear to him, worship his manliness, chivalry and strenuousness.

An Interesting Announcement to the Ladies of St. John

We call the attention of our readers to the large advertisement on another page containing the announcement of Ungar's laundry and Dry Works. This old and reliable firm are now in a far better position than ever to promptly attend to all orders for French dry cleaning and dyeing. To those unfamiliar with the famous French dry cleaning process we might say that its possibilities are limitless. It will make an old garment look as good as new. It restores the color and lengthens the life of all articles of wear. Articles that are moth eaten, or stained by the weather, if French dry cleaned, will never become moth eaten. Messrs Ungar invite the ladies of this city to call at their offices, where all questions will be answered by an expert.
