REMARKABLE RIDE.

British Consul Attacked by Brigands, But Drove Them Off.

at night in the Persian villages, For ten days out of Shiraz no incident of immediately following his own was attacked and robbed. The consul and his party safely reached Shugistan.

Owing to an accidental delay the next part of the road was passed in peace, a band of robbers who had been waiting for the caravan there having moved to attack them elsewhere. About midday one day solitary figures appeared along the foothills skirting the road and cers, with a native officer and five Persian cossacks—altogether twenty guns.

The robbers did not succeed in their intention of drawing the caravan's fire, but a halt was called near the entrance to a valley in order to ascertain what and it was observed that an advance party was riding along the hills, As the road became more enclosed, snip-

a couple of robbers who had come to a standstill owing to their horses being fatigued. One of the Indian troopers was instantly shot dead, and in the fighting which followed a second was killed. The combatants came to close quarters and the native officer killed one of the brigands with his sword. After this encounter the main body of
