WEBSTER & McINTYRE

St. George, N. B.

With froufrou of furbelows and ripples of laughter Miss Petticoats is on her way to St. George where she will be presented by a clever company on Monday eve. Aug. 16 for one night only, and the whole town is on the "qui vive" to see and hear the adventures of this wonderful girl, who, born of French and American parentage on the New England coast, had a most remarkable career. Her name was given her by her fond grandfather with whom she lived on board of an old whaler, because the mother when dining had called her "Mon petit coeur," and left her to old Capt. Stewart, a sturdy sea captain, who lived in the cabin of the "Harpoon," and here little Agatha Renier, daughter of a French nobleman, grew to womanhood. Her brilliant evolution from this quaint home, through the vicissitudes of the smart set of New Bedford, and her final graduation into aristocratic circles of Paris as a leader of society, furnished some very lively reading in the novel of "Miss Petticoats," and it was brought out as a play about five years ago at the great Boston Theatre, where it was greeted nightly by enthusiastic audiences, who pronounced it a powerful and thrilling play. From the shores of picturesque New Bedford to the salon of the Countess Forney is a long stretch, and makes a highly interesting contrast. The villainies and jealousy always awakened by a beautiful woman beset Agatha from the beginning when she saved the life of a rich old lady by "clinging like a scarlet vine" to the horses' heads, until she returned in triumph, and with the same irresistible strength of will, inherited from her Puritan mother, doomed all her former enemies, and brings the remarkable drama to a climax by giving up her own strong will for "love's sweet sake."
