Thanks To All Loyal Canadians
The loyalty and patriotism of Canadians during this crisis have warmed the hearts of all Britons. Her magnificent response in the way of men, supplies and money has evoked admiration in every part of the universe.

We feel it our duty to tender our thanks to all Canadian patrons for their loyalty to our brand of Scotch whisky during the past few weeks. It is gratifying to us, the distillers of ROYAL ARMS, to note that not only have our sales in Canada kept up to the usual mark but there has been an appreciable increase.

ROYAL ARMS will continue to maintain the same high quality as has characterized it for over a century.

“Cells” and “Sells”
Consider these facts before you decide on your war-time advertising policy:

When a firm advertises a brand of merchandise it thereby pre-empt's certain brain cells in the minds of a certain number of people.

Those cells, in each brain, store away the arguments in favor of that brand; and become factors in inducing their owner to purchase the advertised, branded merchandise.

Now, along comes War, with all unsettling of business, all its disturbance of trade; and the manufacturer, faced with the apparent advisability of saving money, begins to consider whether advertising is one of the features on which he can retrench.

But let him cease advertising—and soon, very soon, the public will begin to waver and drift away to other brands. Stop the appeal to those brain cells and soon, very soon, the cells will forswear their allegiance and become acquired by other manufacturers who make a fresh appeal to them.

The brain of every human being is in constant process of change. The cells are shifting, shifting, all the time. Ordinarily, by steady persistent advertising, the manufacturer of a sound article is not only holding the brain cells his goods have won, but is surely, steadily adding to the number of his acquired cells—surely, steadily increasing his hold on the public mind.

Let him stop the advertising and the process of cell capture not only closes, but the cells he has been at such pains to win over, will become lost to him—perhaps forever.

Even a War scarcely excuses the unsound business policy which permits such a catastrophe. Even in war-time, it behaves every manufacturer to keep his advertising at full pressure.
