by Paleur, Weakness and Palpitation of the Heart. Prompt results will follow its use in cases of Sudden Exhaustion arising from Loss of Blood, Acute or Chronic Diseases, and in the weakness that invariably accompanies the recovery from Wasting Fevers. No remedy will give more speedily relief in Dyspepsia or Indigestion, its action on the stomach being that of a gentle and harmless tonic, exciting the organs of digestion to action and thus affording immediate and permanent relief. The careful properties of the different ingredients which the Elixir contains render it a valuable remedy for Dyspepsia, which is apt to occur in persons of a nervous constitution.
For improved Blood, Loss of Appetite, Debility, and all cases where an effective and certain stimu-

THE GOLD MINE OF THE VASSE.

"What property do you own here?" asked Mr. Wyville.
"The donkey and water-cart is mine, though the village gave 'em to me.
That's all the property."

"I need a careful man to oversee a mine," said Mr. Wyville. "But he will have to go to Australia. He will be comfortably placed, much more so than you are here; and his engagement will be permanent. I came to offer the place to you. Can you come?"

"Yes," said Officer Lodge, as quietly as if he were asked to walk down the street. "Do you want me to start now?"

"It is now noon. I will return to London on the two o'clock train. Meanwhile, I will walk through the village." Turning to Ngaraji, Mr. Wyville said in his own language, "You can remain here."

Mr. Wyville walked straight to the old home of Alice Walmaley, and lingered a long time in and around the deserted and decaying cottage. There was a warm feeling in his heart, a new and happy growth, which was thrilled and strengthened as his eye fell on objects that might once have been familiar to Alice Walma-ley.

As he left the place, to return for Officer Lodge, it seemed as if he were as if he had known and loved it all his life. He turned toward it, as he walked down the road, and there was a quick glance in his face.

"She will leave it all behind," he murmured. "There shall be no picture of its wretchedness in her memory." He passed to the court-house. Officer Lodge and Ngaraji were sitting in the office, silently looking at each other. At first, Officer Lodge had spoken to his companion; but Ngaraji had answered only by a grunt and unintelligible mono-syllables. They then had subsided into perfect silence.

"Are you ready?" asked Mr. Wyville.
"Yes."
"Come."
They went to the railway station, and took their seats for London. Officer Lodge and Ngaraji sat opposite each other, and continued their acquaintance in the same silent fashion which had marked its beginning in the station house.

On board the convict ship, they had attracted the lonely Mr. Haggatt, who a painstaking manner at first, joined their company.
As these three stood near the bow of the Hougoumont, looking up at the purple cliffs of lofty Fife, there rose an extraordinary commotion on the deck, among the convicts.

That morning, two men, the worst and most disorderly characters in the ship, had been locked up in the punishment cells. They had first been sentenced to work at oakum-picking; but they sat within the bars idle, staring out at the crowd of convicts on deck, and singing and shouting. For this they had been again reported, and the officers had now come to take them out for further punishment.

The officers stood waiting for him who had the key of the barred door; and he was searching vainly in his pockets.
After a while, it was evident that the key had been mislaid or lost. The officers could not open the barred door.

The two culprits, within were the first to understand this, and they set up a howl of derision. They danced about in their den, cursing the officers and snapping their fingers at them through the bars.

At length a dreadful idea struck one of the derisive wretches. His eye had fallen on the heap of loosely-picked oakum inside the bars. With a yell he seized an armful of the inflammable material and threw it far within the cage, against all their force.

The officers stood outside, watching the fellow's action with alarm. When he had gathered all the oakum into a pile, he drew from his pocket a lucifer match, and flourished it before the officer's eyes with a grin of triumph and devilish meaning. His brutal associate within the bars, upon whom the meaning of the preparations broke suddenly at sight of the match, gave a wild shout of delight and defiance.

"Damn you!" he cried, shaking his fist at the powerless warden, "you can't help yourselves. We'll set fire to the ship before your eyes!" The dreadful threat struck terror into the convicts on deck, who began to huddle together like sheep.

The officers looked into each other's pale faces, dumb and helpless. One of them caught hold of the massive bars of the door, and shook them with all his force. He might as well have tried to shake down the mast.

Yelling with delight at their power, the two miscreants within piled up the pyre. Then, he who held the match selected a dry place on deck to strike it.
He bent down on his knees, and covered his action from the eyes of the officers.

In another instant he sprang to his feet, holding a blazing rope of loosely-twisted oakum. With a laugh that rang through the ship, he applied the torch to the pile of oakum, and the yellow flame licked up the ready material with fearful rapidity.

At the sight of the flame, a cry of alarm rose from the huddled convicts, drowning the reports of the officers' pistols, who were shooting down the incoherent diaries.

It was too late. Had they used the pistols before the match was struck, they would have acted in time. To slaughter the wretches now was to insure the continuation of the fire. Were the prisoners let alone, they might have become terrified at their own danger, and have quenched the blaze before it had seized the ship.

One of the officers placed the muzzle of his pistol to the ponderous lock of the cage, and fired. The bullet destroyed the lock, but did not force it. At that moment, with a cry of success, an officer dashed through the crowd and seized the lock. He had found the key!

But it would not turn in the shattered lock, and the bullet had wedged everything together, and the bolt had become a rivet.

By this time the flames had swept over the pile of tarred rope, and had fastened on the beams overhead. The pitch bubbled up between the seams of the deck, and dense volumes of smoke poured through the bars.

The alarm had spread to the convicts below, and a deafening sound of affright arose from the hundreds of horrified hearts.

The officers dashed wildly to and fro.
Some of the ship's crew had begun to work with axes on the roof of the cage, which was a heavily-timbered deck. The fire began to roar with the dreadful sound that denotes the untamable power of approaching conflagration.

At the moment, Mr. Wyville came forward, and with one glance took in the whole scene. Every one gave way for him as he strode to the cage. The convic-tured preyed him, "save us!" the ultimate appeal of terror-stricken men. He stood on a instant looking at the fire —saw the mortal danger. In ten minutes more, no earthly power could subdue the flames.

"Shall we open the hatchway, and let the convicts come on deck?" asked the pallid chief warden, the key in his hand.
"No!" shouted Wyville with such sudden force that the man staggered back in dismay.

Mr. Wyville looked at the lock, and saw its condition. He shook the bars with amazing force.
A gust of flame and smoke now rushed through the bars, and drove every one back, even Mr. Wyville. He rushed forward again, then turned to the officers, who had retreated to the foremast, and called them to him. Not one moved—they were cowed.

Another instant, and a tall man pushed through the crowd, and stood beside Wyville. It was Mr. Haggatt. Their eyes met for one instant. They understood one another.

"What do you want?" asked Haggatt, in a low, steady voice.
"The silk curtains from the dining-room—quick!" answered Mr. Wyville in the same tone.

Next moment, Haggatt was clearing a lane for himself through and over the crowd. He disappeared toward the cabin. He had first been sentenced to
again reported, and the officers had now
ishment.

Mr. Wyville stood waiting for him, holding in his hand a heavy iron bar, in which he had taken from the rail. He took one of the curtains, twisted it into a rope, and pushed one end through the bars. This end he brought out four bars off, and around these four bars he wound both curtains, one after the other.

When the curtains were entirely wound in this way, he inserted the heavy iron rod between the folds, at the two central bars, and began to turn it end over end like a lever. The first turn made the silken rope rigid; the second strained it; the third called out all the muscular power of the man. But there was nothing gained.

Mr. Wyville turned, and looked toward Haggatt, who approached. Both men seized the iron lever, and pulled it down with all their force.

"This is a complete trick," said Haggatt as they paused for breath.
Mr. Wyville made no reply; but continued the tremendous leverage. These pale, bony fingers, that had been so often seen yielding—the two outer bars bending toward the centre under the terrific strain.

Once again the upper end of the lever was seized by both men, and with a united effort of strength pulled and pressed down. The next turn was easily made; the mighty bars had bent like lead in the centre and then broken, leaving two gaps wide enough to allow the entrance of a man.

When this was done, Mr. Wyville and Mr. Haggatt fell back, while the officers and sailors dashed into the burning cage, smothering the flames with wet sails, beneath which they tramped out the fire.

The vessel was saved, and not one minute could have been spared. In the wild uproar that followed, each one gyring rent to the pent-up excitement of the moment, Mr. Wyville, turning in the crowd, met the eyes of Haggatt, earnestly fixed on his face. He had often observed his watchfulness before; but there was another meaning in his eyes to-day.

To be continued.
Scrofula
As the coming of a great time is heralded by the display of cautionary signals, so is the approach of that dread and fatal disease Consumption of the lungs, usually announced in advance by pimples, eruptions, crops, when glandular swellings, and kindred outward manifestations of the infernal disease of the lungs, casting them to decay and break down. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is the only remedy for this, as for all diseases having their origin in bad blood. It improves the system and digestion, increases nutrition and builds up the wasted system.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely cured.

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.
—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.
—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier. —Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three weeks formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and three bottles of this medicine have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation in my eye. —Reuben T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing recommended the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete. —W. E.
Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.
