 there I tell you what one could feel how Byron felt and read the spirit that breathes in his lines, for the romance plays about that prison cell and we could not but be inspired.
 The rest of the chateau was interesting and romantic and well worth seeing but the prison of Bonaparte was what I was gladdest of having seen.
 The next day was a Saturday and again it was gloriously fine and clear and I spent it all in the water journeying to Geneva and back.
 We were had a little party of four a nice English boy, who was at my pension, called Beckett, his aunt Mrs. Oliver and her son. Mrs. Oliver is one of the very nicest women I have ever met and the more I came to

 My dear King How I am in Paris and charmed and delighted to be here. If Switzerland is the most beautiful and grandest country for natural scenery Paris I think is the most wonderful city planned by human man. I had no idea until I came here and saw the boulevards and esplanades, the Bois and the Champs Elysees, that such a beautiful city could exist. I am charmed with the life here, I am enthusiastic over the Exposition and I mean to make the very best use I can of my month here. I have
