some means of securing peace. Some disaster may cause the Central powers to break down before desired negotiations can be made. Right now there is a competition, whether we believe it or not, as to who will bring about the most satisfactory peace with the greatest credit. It is the greatest game in diplomacy in the whole war. The Central powers are systematically developing peace sentiment, and whether the Allied powers want to or not, this is something which cannot be disregarded. The diplomacy of peace is a greater art than the diplomacy of war. No nation can afford to ignore any offer of another, for peace sentiment is an uncertain quantity and such a nation might find itself to a considerable extent out-manoeuvred in this great game.

Allies Should Expose Aims

The Central powers are attempting to develop latent pacifism and create divisions of opinion among the Allies which to all outward appearances have never got together and formulated definitely any concerted opinion of how far they needed to carry the war, or what terms they would demand when that time came. They would be better to do this in their own interests. The Central powers have endorsed the policy of "no annexations and no indemnities" and offered to submit disputes to arbitration and bring about simultaneous international disarmament. Most people will say that the conduct of the German government in the past would not justify faith in these professions and they are correct. But in view of the fact that the Allies are fighting to bring about a revolution in German methods of international thinking, it surely would be advisable to test the point and ask the German government for a concrete definition of its proposals. Its failure to make any advances in reply would not only be evidence of hypocrisy on its part but would keep Allied international opinion more strongly cemented and offer encouragement to those in Germany who are working for the substitution of democratic organization in that country in place of the present form of irresponsible government.

There has been more peace talk in the last three months among European nations than in the previous three years. Some say this is on account of the weakening of Germany, to her realization that she cannot win. The assumption is only partly correct. There are evidences in both France and Great Britain that there exist tendencies toward a cessation of hostilities that cannot be checked. The changes in the French cabinet and forced recognition of socialist opinion as represented by the leader of that party, Albert Thomas, is one of these.

The whole problem of war and peace is the greatest before the world today. There are too many evidences in Canada that it is being regarded as a common-place and that earnest national or humanitarian interest in it is waning. Now is the time for hard thinking on this great question, or when peace comes Canadian public opinion will find itself even far more confused on many great questions that are paramount ones in international adjustment than it has been on its own internal political problems.

The price of farm machinery has been advancing for some time. The cost can be reduced by making each machine last longer. A large proportion of farm machinery wears out too soon because it is not given proper care and attention. More machinery is worn away each year by rust and weather than by service. The life of any machine may be lengthened by protection from weather, good lubrication and prompt attention to repairs. Machinery should be properly housed as soon as possible after it is used. Housing not only protects the implements from rust but leaves them in good condition for use the following season.

"Willie, your master's report of your work is very bad. Do you know that when Woodrow Wilson was your age he was head of the school?"

"Yes, pa; and when he was your age he was president of the United States."
