RICH DEPOSIT OF GEMS DISCOV ERED IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

Gem Found Worth $1,500.

Somewhere in one of the many small streams which flow into the Bay of Islands, Newfoundland, is a valuable deposit of pearl oysters. From that deposit hundreds of pearls have been taken, one at least valued as high as $1,500. Its exact location is known to but two men, one Rev. Elwood Worcester, rector of the Emmanuel Church, Boston, and the other his trusty Indian guide, who has accompanied the clergyman year after year during his caribou huating expeditions into the island.

Deposits of pearl oysters are not rare in North America by any means. Hundreds of them have been discovered, but they are located as a rule in southern waters, in the Gulf of Mexico, in the Caribbean Sea, and on the Pacific coast. Even in some of the rivers in the northern part of the continent the pearl mussel is abundant, yet the occurrence of good pearls in these shells does not appear to be frequent.

Many good pearls have been found from time to time in the rivers of New England, and the Canadian rivers have yielded fresh water pearls to considerable size and beauty, especially in the small streams in the country north of Quebec.

Columbus found pearls plentiful among the Indians when he discovered America, and took back to Ferdinand and Isabella hundreds of beautiful stones. The Indians recognized them as stones of beauty and Indian maidens wore strings of pearls which would create a sensation at an up-to-date horse show or opera. The Cabots, John and Sebastian, sailing westward from England under direction of King Henry VII., found a few in the Newfoundland rivers and took them back to their patron, who was delighted with them.

It was from the writings of these latter explorers, says Dr. Worcester, that he gleaned the information which led to his finding the pearl deposit. He conceived the idea suddenly while on a caribou expedition into Newfoundland, and, having read in their reports to the King of the early discovery, set out to find the pearl oysters, with but a vague idea of their location and little hope of finding them.

Being much interested in Newfoundland, Dr. Worcester had read all of the history and much of the literature about the island. While he was serving as rector of a prominent Philadelphia church he made his annual visit to the country, and when his schooner was anchored in the Bay of Islands he recalled the pearl discovery of the Cabots and determined to make a search.

Going up into one of the streams with his faithful Indian guide, they watched the bed of the stream closely. Some distance up they discovered an oyster bed, and the Indian began to dive from a small boat after them. Time and time again he dived and came up with one or two shells. He had gone down perhaps twenty-five times when he returned to the shore where Dr. Worcester was standing, bringing with him two shells which seemed to be pearl bearers. They opened the first one, but it was empty. On opening the second the sight they beheld almost took their breath away. Reposing snugly in one corner of the shiny white shell was a beautiful gleaming pear!

It was a most encouraging start. They had found a deposit. Whether it was the one referred to by the Cabots or not Dr. Worcester did not know, and he didn't care much. Persevering, they found 305 pearls, large and small. But Dr. Worcester had made the tiresome trip to New-foundland for hunting and recreation.

POLICE OF LONDON

German Experts Who Investigate Their System Loud In Praises.

Their System Loud in Praises.

A special German police mission has been visiting Scotland Yard to compare the Lendon detective and police methods with those of Berlin.

The visitors have been given every opportunity for an insight into Metropolitan police methods, and have been personally conducted by experienced detectives over all parts of London.

As the outcome of their investigations the German delegates have declared London to be "the best policed city in the world."

Berlin is known as "a city of police," for officialdom there is in full control, so Scotland Yard authorities accept this opinion as one of the greatest compliments ever paid them.

The German visitors were shown all over New Scotland Yard, and taken at night to the "sights" of the West End and down into the East End slums.

at night to the "sights" of the West End and down into the East End slums.

In the lowest lodging houses and criminal haunts they saw for themselves how very quietly and expeditiously the London policeman works.

Marvatous System.

Our marveious system of traffic control aroused their admiration, and they were astoniahed to find how popular the police are, in spite of their authority.

"The power of the police in Germany is far greater than yours, but their success is not so great," said one of the German visitors in discussing his experiences.

"You can hardly accomplish anything in Berlin without consulting our police and obtaining their permission.

"The district police inspector has to pass and sign your insurance papers, and if you engage or discharge a servant you have to supply a German police with name, grade, nationality and religion.

"In London the police are far less officious, and the relations between them and the people they protect seem to be most cordial."

During the last few years the London police have provided hints for the chief cities of the world. Special missions have come from France, Russia, Switzerland, Spain and the United States, and in each case the visitors have admitted the superiority of English police methods.

Sir John Tenniel, Veteran Punch Artist, Celebrates 87th Birthday.

Sir John Tenniel, the famous Punch cartoonist, who celebrated his eighty-seventh birthday the other day, is still a fine military-looking man, with all his faculties intact and as keen a mind as when he drew his first cartoon, says M. A. P. At a very early age he displayed a marked talent for drawing, although his great ambition as a small boy was to be a circus clown! That interesting period passed, however, he made up his mind to become an artist, and he was only sixteen when his first picture was exhibited. Henceforth he progressed steadily, and gained wide-spread praise for some illustrations to "Ae-sop's Fables," which were so admired by Douglas Jerrold that when Richard Doyle resigned from the staff of Punch, that famous wit advised Mark Lemon to give young Tenniel a chance. The advice was acted upon, and in 1851 the future Knight began his firty years' connection with The London Chartwari. After that all was plain sailing, and in a comparatively short time his name was known all over England. Among his many admirers was the late Prince Bismarek, who became the possessor of one of the artist's original sketches. In 1893 Tenniel received his Knighthood, and his retirement from Punch came in 1901. Apart from his work for that famous paper, nothing that he ever did was cleverer than his illustrations to Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking-glass." Sir John lives quitely in a pretty house near Maida Vale, where, surrounded by his favorite pictures, he enjoys a well-earned retirement.

Romantic History of an Isolated People—Crews of British Warships Are Hospitably Entertained—Islanders Attend Divine Service on Board-Memory of John Adams Is Held In Reverence by His Descendants.

in Reverence by His Descendants.

"A few months age," writes a correspendent of "The Graphic," "two of His Majesty's warships, the Flora and Cambrian, paid a visit to Pitcairn Island, making a stay of several days. Pitcairn, as everybody knows, is inhabited by descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty, and most people are familiar with the romantic history of the little island far away in the Pacific. On dropping anchor in Bounty Bay the Flora and Cambrian were immediately boarded by the islanders, who brought off a large quantity of oranges, bananas, and pineapples, which were very welcome to the crews. There were about 160 souls on the island, and the general health of the community was very good. They certainly all looked extremely well, due, no doubt, to the outdoor life they lead. The weather being fine during the stay of the ships, a large number of officers and men landed in order to see the conditions under which the islanders live. There is only one landing-place, in Bounty Bay, and even here landing is only possible when the sea is calm, owing to the rocky and unprotected nature of the coast. Bounty Bay, of course, derives the name from the ship which was run ashore there by those of the mutineers who came over in her from Tahiti.

Their Hospitality.

Climbing the steen path from the Their Hospitality.

Their Hospitality.

Climbing the steep path from the landing-place, one came upon the little settlement, which presented a picturesque appearance. All the womenfolk of the colony were anxious to show their hospitality to the visitors from the ships, and they invited all and sundry to come inside their little houses and make themselves at home. The houses of Pitcairn do not appear much better than huts to European eyes, but they are suited to the troptical climate of the island. The church is a more pretentions structure, cal climate of the island. The church is a more pretentions structure, though having no claim to architectural beauty. Although on the maternal side the islanders are descended from Tahitan stock, the strain of native blood is not very noticeable. In some respects, however, such as their keen eyesight, acute hearing, and agility, they have retained some of the characteristics of their ruder ancestors.

ity, they have retained some of the characteristics of their ruder ancestors.

It is interesting to know that there is still alive a link with the old mutineers, in the person of Thursday October Christian—a grandson of the original Christian. The old man—he was born in 1819—is the only one existing who has spoken to John Adams; he was 10 years of age when the latter died. He was an object of great interest to the people from the menof-war, and he held quite a levee in his little house. He remembers John Adams very distinctly, and related how the reformed mutineer used to teach him and the other young members of the colony. Adams remains in his memory as a 'good old man and a sincere Christian.' The grave of Adams is in a shady grove, away from the burial ground of the community. On the Sunday morning, in addition to the men, a number of women and children, came off to the Flora and attended Divine Service on board. They joined heartily in the singing, and followed the service with an earnestness which showed that the precepts inculcated by John Adams had lost none of their force."

Weman Buried Alive.

A terrible story of a young weman who was buried alive is reported from a little village near Melbourne, Anstralia. She was supposed to have died and a burial permit having been given as usual, she was interred on the following day. The gravedigger, however, left the grave only partially filled, thinking there was no hurry, and three days later an inhabitant of the village, passing by the cemetery, stopped to look at the grave. He was surprised to hear loud knocking, apparently inside the ceffin, buried under only a very light layer of ground. He could not at first believe his senses, and got down to put his ears to the ground. Not only did the knocking continue, but he also heard the young woman monuing. He hurried for assistance and a doctor, and when the coffin was opened the young woman was found alive indeed, as she sat up and tried to speak. But to their horror, she did not long survive. Every effort was made to help her, but she gave a last gasp, couched up some blood, and sank back in the doctor's atms. This time she was really dead. Woman Buried Alive.

GRAVITATION.

Its Wonderful and Far Reaching Effects Upon the World.

"The effects of gravitation are so familiar as to demand only the briefest mention, yet most of us perhaps seldom stop to consider how far reaching these effects are," says Dr. Henry Smith Williams. "But for gravitation the winds would not blow, the waters would not descend, and the mountain tops would not crumble into the valleys. Each particle of pulverized rock would remain where it was formed, and there would be no such thing as a mixed soil. mixed soil.

ed gravitation is perpetually active and every particle of matter is being and every particle of matter is being eternally tugged at and urged to get nearer to the earth's center. So no sooner does a fragment of rock at a mountain crest become loosened than gravitation hurls it crashing down into the valley, shattering it into frag-ments perhaps or at the least grinding off some portions of ments perhaps or at the least grinding off some portions of its surface as well as of the surface of the rocks against which it is dashed.

"By such means and with the further aid of its handmaidens, wind and water, gravitation works its unceasing surroces of leastly the surroces." water, gravitation works its unceasing purpose of leveling the surface of the earth. In a few brief geological moments it rounds the shoulders of the haughtlest mountain, and, given time enough, if will bring every particle of rock back to the sea bed, whence it originally sprang. Incidental Music.

One afternoon a couple from an adjoining town presented themselves to a Boston divine and asked to be married just as he was about to enter the pulpit to conduct an afternoon service. The minister replied that he regretted that he could not at that moment comply with their wish, but that immediately upon the conclusion of the service he would take pleasure in performing the ceremony. The lovers, after demurring, seated themselves in the rear of the church. When the minister had finished the service he made the following announcement: "The parties who are to be joined in matrimony will present themselves at the chancel impresent themselves at the chancel impresent themselves at the chancel immediately after the singing of hymn 415, "Mistaken Souls That Dream of Heaven?"

She Wanted a Book.

A fashionably dressed young woman came hurrying into a bookstore recently and approached a salesman with the statement: "I want to get a book—it's a red book—not very thick! No, I don't know the name of it or what it is about, because I haven't read it. It has a picture in the middle of the cover—at least I think it is a picture—it is —at least I think it is a picture—it is something round, done in gilt. It may be the name.

"I wish you would hurry and hunt up the book, because I am taking a train to New York and I want it to read on to New York and I want it to read on the trip. I saw some one reading it on the train the other day and laughing over it, and that's why I want it.
