

A Neat Amendment

Aaron Burr was a most courtly gentleman of the old school. His insinuating gallantry found its way to all hearts, and if he ever did make a mistake in using the language of compliment he was quick to retrieve it.

Soon after a long absence in Europe he met in New York a lady somewhat advanced in years. He was passing her without recognition when she said: "Colonel, don't you remember me?"

"I do not, madam."

"I am Miss K—, sir."

"What," he exclaimed, "Miss K— yet?"

"Yes, sir," replied the lady, somewhat offended, "Miss K— yet."

Perceiving her error, he gently took her hand, saying in his suave and emphatic manner: "Well, madam, then I venture to assert that it is not the fault of my sex—'Youth's Companion'."

A Clergyman Felled.

A clerical-looking gentleman, in the hope of obtaining a contribution, entered the office of a Texas newspaper, and, finding the editor at his desk, said: "I am soliciting aid for a high-spirited gentleman of refinement and intelligence, who is in need of a little ready money, but is too proud to make known his sufferings."

"Why!" exclaimed the editor, "I'm the only man in town that answers to that description."

"What's the gentleman's name?" "I am not at liberty to disclose his name." "It must be me, parson," said the editor, "wiping away a tear. The editor is that the look the parson gave from will haunt him in his grave."

Peppia.

Up in her balcony where
Vines were trailing the lilies run
Spilling a scent on the air,
Setting a screen to the sun,
Fair as the morning is fair,
Sweet as a blossom is sweet,
Dwells in her rosy retreat
Peppia.

Often a glimpse of her face
When the wind rustles the vine
Parting the leaves for a space
Glances this window of mine,
Pink in its lovely embrace,
Pink as the morning is pink,
Sweet as a blossom I think
Peppia.

I who dwell over the way
Watch where Peppia is hid—
Safe from the glare of the day
Like an eye under its lid:
Over and over I say,
Name like the song of a bird,
Melody shut in a word,
"Peppia."

Look where the little leaves stir!
Look where the green curtains are drawn!
There in a blossomy blur
Breaks a dimmutive dawn:
Dark as the morning is fair,
Name like a lip of the south,
Fit for a rose's small mouth,
Peppia.

THE STUDENT'S CHARM.

An Oldtime Story of the Days of Witchcraft.

It was late on an autumn evening in 1660, the year of the restoration. There came riding up to the inn of one of the most straggling Oxfordshire villages a well mounted young gentleman of somewhat distinguished appearance. Calling to the hostler he gave particular instructions as to the treatment of his horse, and ordering the host and his wife to prepare a room for him, he retired to his room, desiring to be called when the meal was ready.

In about an hour the supper was on the table, and the stranger sat down to it. He had evidently come from a distance, the state of his horse showed that, and the way he did justice to the landlady's cookery proved that he must have been remarkably hungry. The good woman was in truth rather alarmed at the rapidity with which he disposed of what she set before him.

It was a young fellow, of about 18 or 19, with a broad brow and strange, piercing eyes that seemed to follow her about the room, and looked through her to some of the principal cities in England and Scotland. During his stay he has made himself thoroughly conversant with all the latest improvements pertaining to his art.

These heavy purchases were made in anticipation of the almost unprecedented advance which has since taken place in foreign woollens.

We respectfully solicit your inspection of the Stock before selecting your Spring outfit, as you will find our prices very below those of our competitors who have bought since the advance.

Our Cutter, Mr. A. H. ROBERTSON, has arrived by last Steamer from a visit to some of the principal cities in England and Scotland. During his stay he has made himself thoroughly conversant with all the latest improvements pertaining to his art.
