got out of the building but was burned and cut both by getting out of the cage and by the crowd, who seemed possessed to kill all the animals which came out of the building. Only the cat animals were burned. The monkeys and other were in other buildings. Many of the idols which are exhibited with the abay were last destroyed. The cries of the burning animals were heartrending Through the flames could be seen the finally succumbing to the smoke and finally su out prominently among the ruins against the dark background of the night. The white polar bear was in a building apart from the other animals and was unharmed. At 2.50 a. m. but one elephant was the control of the co missing. The total loss is estimated at $700,000, upon which there was but $100,-Four elephants, five lions, seven leo-pards, six panthers, four kangaroos, six horses and a large number of smaller animals perished. One of the large elephants escaped, and this morning was found drowned in the Sound near the lighthouse. Mr. Bailey says $100,000 will probably cover the loss.

The Great Numidian Killed. tragedy of the burning of the "Greatest Show on Earth" which is more heart rending than another, it is the fate of this Numidian lion. He was a wonderful beast—a great tawny-colored animal with a capacity for destruction equal to a hundred bull-dogs, but with a disposition as gentle as a dove. Hundreds of thousands of people throughout the United States have paid homage to this amiable king of beasts. It was his wont in time of the street parades, which were always a feature of Barnum's show, to ride, not in an iron cage like his fellows, but proudly perched on the summit of the band wagon or some equally glittering chariot, from which elevation he surveyed the little children in the streets calmly, dispassionately and without ever once licking his chops.

"Nim" was a prisoner in the burning-building. This thought stimulated Tim Buckley to an act of heroism. At the risk of his own life he rushed to the Hon's cage unlocked it and called the great shaggy beast out. The lion followed him with the docility of a Newfoundland dog. Out of the blazing building was Tim followed by "Nim" At the sight of the exaping lion one of the gallant Bridge-port policemen whipped out his revolver and opened a fusilade. How many shots if any, took effect upon the poor beast is not known, but before the policeman could reload his pistol Buckley rushed at him, furious with rage, and cried:

"If you kill that lion I will kill you."

And ab would have told him that she thought it did, and if he didn't like is he thought it did, and if he didn't like is he thought it did, and if he didn't like it be tould go and get another, girl or some thought it did, and if he didn't like is he thought it did, and if he didn't like is he thought it did, and if he dould it has would and that was not her each thought it did, and if he dould it has the thought it dould not he thought it dould not him was not him gike take any notice of the remons trance. But he was a young man, and that was not his way. He was going to ach the twas not his way. He was goi bim, furious with rage, and cried:

The novel spectacle of a man defend in the life of a lion attracted the attention of the immense crowd which had gathered at the fire. They pressed in upon poor Tim and "Nim" with clubs and stones. Long captivity nor life on a band wagon had notaltogether broke the proud spirit of the Numidian lion. With a tariffic roar he roused himself, and, scattering the crowd right and left, and, scattering the crowd right and left lesped the high fence surrounding the grounds and disappeared.

"Yes, we set hire to work yesterday."

"Had any experience?"

"Lot's of it."

His subsequent tate is perhaps best told in the words of Mrs. Christina Gilligan, who resides with her mother in small quarters over a grocery store at the corner of Grove street and Wood avenue. Mrs. Gilligan is tall and somewhat angular. She is given to outdoor pursuits, drives a farm wagon and keeps several cows in a small shed adjoining the store. "I was," says Mrs Gilligan, "awoke about 12.30 by a noise in the cowahed. I knew something was the matter with the critters and I went down to find out what was the trouble. Was I dressed? Well not quite so much as I be now. As I got to the door of the cowahed I saw some critter lying on its atomach right on top of my red cow, and kinder of reaching for the little heifer which was the relay morning. About 10,30 o'clock an alarm was sounded, quickly followed by a general alarm, and thousands of persons were attracted to the spot. In less than 30 minutes the big building, which was 600,200 feet and two storeys in height, was entirely consumed. The first intimation of the fire was given by the roaring of the lions and tigers, which seemed to realise the impending danger. Next the elephants struggled in their chains, but in an incredibly abort time the fiames awept from one end of the huge structure to the other. There were six watchmen employed on the premises, but they were belples to check the flames. One of the men was in the borreshuiding when his lamp rapided, ignifying the hay and attaw. Five of the watchmen have reported, but the sixth is missing, and it is believed he was burned. The upper portion of the building was enveloped in fire, and no one dared to approach the building was enveloped in fire, and no one dared to approach the building, being fearful of the crazed animals.
