She turned on him so suddenly that the amiable Sir Jordan started back from her blazing eyes and upheld hand. "Money! Do you dare to think I would touch it—that I would accept one penny? No, not if I were starving! You offer me money! Jordan Lyme, you don't know what you are doing. You are driving a broken-hearted woman desperate! Desperate! Do you hear? Do you whear? Do you know what that means? Do you? She drew a long breath. "With all my misery, in this the hour of my humiliation, the bitterest pang of all is the thought—the thought that burns, burns into my heart—that I once trusted you, yes, and loved you! And you offer me money! The woman who should be your wife, but whom you have betrayed and deserted! Look at me, Jordan; look well at me. You remember what I was. I've heard from your own lips often enough—those lying lips!—that I was pretty — beautiful. Look at me now; look at your handiwork." She drew the shawl from her white face, distorted by passionate despair and indignation. "Do you think money can restore me to what I was—give me back all I have lost, all you have robbed me of? No, not all the riches of the world! There is only one thing you can do for me, now that with a sneer you have told me that you will not never did mean to, make me your wife; you can kill me! You shrink rrom that — for Jordan, biting at his lip, had shrunk. "Is it worse to kill the body or the soul? What is there left for a young girl. "Do you think money can restore me to what I was—give me back all I have lost, all you have robbed me of? No, not all the riches of the world! There is only one thing you can do for me, now that with a sneer you have told me that you will not, never did mean to, make me your wife; you can kill me! You shrink rom that — for Jordan. biting at his lip, had shrunk. "Is it worse to kill the body or the soul? What is there left for me but to die?" Her voice broke into a wail, a moan that might have touched the heart of a satyr, they suddenly grew fierce and hard and determined. "But fierce and hard and determined. "But fierce and hard and determined. "But no, I will not—I will not die! I will live, Jordan Lynne; live for the hour in which God shall strike the balance be-tween you and me. The hour will come!"—she struck her breast—"it will come, sneer as you may." Jordan was not sneering, he was far too uncomfort-able to manage a sneer. "And when it does come, I will show you as much! able to manage a sneer. "And when it does come, I will show you as much mercy and pity as you have this night shown me."

shown me."

She looked at him full in the eyes, her face distorted by the convicting emotions—despair, resentment, humiliation—which tortured her; then, dragging the shawl round her, turned and left him. Before she had gone many yards he saw her stagger and full against the railings, by which she supported herself by one hand.

Sir Jordan Lynne did not go to her assistance, but waited until she had recov ered and moved on again; then, he, too, turned on his way home.

He was very much annoyed: very much upset, indeed. He had actually offered this foolish young creature, who really had no—no claim upon him, fifty pounds a year, and she had treated him thus.

It was quite an agitated face upon which the policeman who had been watching the interview from the corner, turned his lantern. He recognized Sir Jordan and saluted him, and Sir Jordan smoothed the harassed lines from his face and acknowledged the salute graciously. "Hope that young woman hasn't been annoying you, sir," said the constable. "No, no," replied Jordan. "She is a pensioner, the daughter of a servant in our family, and I am sorry to say she has fallen into evil ways. I have just been saying a few words in season, constable, but I am afraid"—and he shook his head and sighed. "If—if you should meet with her loitering about near my place, perhaps it will be as well to point out to her that the police have instructions to protect persons from annoyance. You understand me I have no doubt." protect persons from annoyance. You un-derstand me, I have no doubt."

The policeman's hand, with Jordan's half sovereign in the palm, went to his "I understand, sir," he said. "I'll give er a word of warning if I see her lofter-her a word of warning if I see her loftering about."

"Thank you, Good night, constable," murmured the good and moral baronet, and with a glance behind him to ascertain if Rachel was in sight or not, he spened his door with a latch-key and passed in to the repose which so estimable a gentleman deserved.

It was on this same night, the night Jordan had turned a deaf ear to the prayer of the girl he had ruined, that Neville, his naif brother "the scapegrace of the family," as Jordan called him, had spent every penny he possessed in the purchase and rescue of the orphan of Lorn Hope Camp.

CHAPTER VIII.

Before a month had passed Sylvia howed signs of marked improvement. She still looked rather like a colt, but like a colt that is well fed and cared for; whereas when Neville-or Jack, as he had re-christened himself-had bought he had re-christened himself—had bought her she was like a colt that had been left to the mercy of the cold winds end oitter weather on some bleak moor.

Her face had lost the wan, sorrowstricken expression which had gone so straight to the heart of Neville that swer-memorable night on which he had first seen her, and thoughtful, and the gray syes, dark with melancholy, showed that she was thinking of her head father, it was evident that time, the consoler, was passing his healing hand over that wound and soothing its aching.

Meth, who had at first merely toler-wound and soothing its aching.

Meth, who had at first merely tolerated the girl's presence, and scarcely looked at her without mumbling "nine hundred pounds!" got used to her and, in a way, fond of her; at any rate, she was good enough to permit Sylvia to do most of the work of the hut, and would have extended her kindness to the length of allowing Sylvia to do it all; but Neville interfered and informed Meth that he had not bought a domestic servant, but a "sister."

As Sylvia grew stronger she became Neville.

As Sylvia grew stronger she became happier. Those wordrous gray eyes of hers grew bright with a light that seemed to illuminate the hut, especially at night, when the solitary candle shone on them as she sat at needlework; the said needlework consisting of repairs to "lack's" clothes, which sadly needed them.

Her voice, too, altered, and though it was still low pitched and refined there was a ring in it which reminded Neville of bells heard at a distance, of an Aeolian harp, and sundry other kinds of music. But if her voice was like music her laughe was music itself. It is true that she laughed but seldom, but when she did Neville found himself obliged to late the strong brush was music itself. It is true that she laughed but seldom, but when she did Neville found himself obliged to late that she laughed but seldom, but when she sitting traps for that laugh, and rejoicing when he succeeded in catching it.

For the rest he treated her as a young man of nearly twenty always treats a girl of fifteen. She was a mere child in his eyes, a child to be petted and humored and "taken care of," but sometimes he found himself startled and bethered by some trick of speech or turn of thought in the child which savored very strongly of the full grown woman; and at such times—when, for instance, she would quote Tennyson, as she had quoted, Shakespaere, and let fall some bit of worldly wisdom from her soft lips—he would straighten his back and wipe the perspiration from his brow, and stare at her meditatively, and the question would rise in his mind uneasily:

when she grows up:

But he always put it aside with the reflection that she was only a child and that she wouldn't "grow up" for years yet, and so end with laughing at her precocity.

As to the light in which Sylvia regarded him—who can describe or even divine it? This much may, however, be said; that she regarded him as her brother, and in the recesses of her girlish mind thought him the best, the handsomest, the bravest, and altogether the noblest specimen of man.

Besides he was comething more than threw herself from the highest precipice, she would have done it.

She was his by right of purchase, and something more, and this conviction, which in her mind was as strong as a religion, brought no pain with it, but, rather, a vague kind of pleasure and satisfaction.

During the month things had been looking up in Lorn Hope Camp, and though no one had found a nugget as big as Neville's, the men had had better luck, and some of them declared that the "orphan," as they called Sylvia, had brought the luck back to Lorn Hope, and that they were all going to be rich.

Neville's claim only just paid for his labor—at very low wages—but he still stuck to it, and with more contentment than he would have imagined possible.

Wroking by one's self, with no one to share hopes and fears, was a different thing from working with Sylvia's sympathy always turned on, and the dust and the heat, though they were really quits as bad as before, did not seem half so unendurable and aggravating with Sylvia sitting by the edge of the pit, just out of the dust, and in the shade of an awning he had rigged up for her.

She was never tired of sitting there, and sometimes, after a long silence, Nev-yeard of prisons where women are zonfined. Police matrons should be in every city, and a Federal law should be recyred of prisons where women are zonfined.

shade of an awning he had rigged up for her.

She was never tired of sitting there, and sometimes, after a long silence, Neville, thinking she had fallen asleep, would turn and look at her, and meet her gray eyes fixed upon him, as if she found him more worthy of her attention than the book.

One day, in the midst of one of these silences, she began to sing.

One day, in the midst of one of these silences, she began to sing.

At first she eang in a low, subdued voice, then, as if she had forgotten his scraped the dust from his spade:

"Bravo, Syl! You don't pipe badly. Thought it was a thrush at first—an English thrush, you know——" presence, her voice grew fuller, but not less sweet, and she sang like a nightingale.

Neville was startled, but he was care.

Neville was startled, but he was careful to keep his back to her, and not frighten the bird that had suddenly filled the hot silence with such delicious welcome.

LIQUIDATING YORK LOAN.

Legal Proceedings Likely to Drag for Several Months.

Toronto, Sept. 18.—Yesterday, in urg-ng that there should be a continuous sitting in the liquidation proceedings of the York Loan, several lawyers connectsaid; that she regarded him as her brother, and in the recesses of her girlish mind thought him the best, the handsomest, the bravest, and altogether the noblest specimen of man.

Besides, he was something more than her brother, she never forgot for a moment, though since his injunction she had never again referred to it, that he had "bought" her, and she regarded him as her owner and master. She considered that she owed him not only sisterly love, but implicit obedience. Neville had only to express a wish for her to set about gratifying it; indeed, very often Neville found that she had supplied his desires before he had given them voice. If he had told her to climb up the rugged hill that overlooked the valley and throw herself from the highest proches.

Government will be asked to do all in its power to prevent the spread of polygamy. Indecent postcards were also strongly condemned. The sacredness of the marriage law was urged upon the men and women of the country.

The session concluded with numerous appointments of superintendents in various departments.

CHINESE EMIGRATING.

Many Who Have Money Saved Leaping

Vancouver.

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 16.—Many Chinese having money saved are preparing to return to China on the steamer Monteagle it a few days. Many have already shipped their wives and children to New Westminster. After the notorious riot local firms put-private watchmen over their warehouses adjacent to the Chinese district as a guard against fire. This impressed the Orientals.

Ninety-seven Chinese out of the 493 who arrived on the Empress of Japan this morning paid the head tax of $500. One hundred and sixty-one go to the United States and the remainder to Jamaica and Havana. The Empress was quarantined at Nagasaki on account of the cholera scare at Shanghai.

A curious phase of the Oriental question has emerged in connection with the public schools. Young Chinese come here and pay $500 to gain entrance. Students are exempt. If a Chinese attends school one year his $500 is returned. He attends.
