A Child of Sorrow.

CHAPTER VIII.

Don't ask me if he was happy. I don't know. And he doesn't know. At times he felt tempted to stop in the middle of the crowded street and burst out into wild, hilarious laughter; at others the round, commonplace face of Josiah Purley, with its weak mouth, and blinking, grateful eyes, rose before him; and then it was as if a dead weight had fallen on his heart, and he felt faint and sick with a mixture of remorse and apprehension.

He had eaten little or nothing all day, for he had felt as if food would choke him, but he had a glass or two of wine at the Bodogas; and, of course, towards evening he began to feel light-headed. About nine o'clock he turned in the direction of home. Carrie had just lit the lamp, Maida was lying on the sofa learning a new piece. Her throat was rather worse, and, as a consequence, she was full of anxiety about the future. It was all very well for Carrie to talk about a bonnet-shop, but if her father failed the family burden would fall upon Maida. And oh! if she were to lose her voice!

"There's father," said Carrie. "How late he is. I hope he has better news. Thank goodness Ricky has gone to dine with a friend, and will not be here to talk about Believing Emma, or whatever it was. If father is in low spirits to-night I shall persuade him to have some whiskey, and perhaps we might take him out to supper."

The door opened and Carrington entered. Something in his face made the two girls stare at him in speechless anticipation. He came in with unsteady gait, his hat tilted forward, and not to the back of his head as usual, his mouth ajar with a strange smile. Maida sat upright with a look of apprehension, and practical Carrie went to him quickly.

"Father, you are late. Have you been at work?"

Rheumatism Entirely Gone

After Twenty-seven Years of Suffering—Swelling and Puffiness Has Disappeared—Not a Pain or an Ache Left.

Kincardine, Ont., May 29th.—A most astonishing cure of rheumatism and eczema has been reported here, and Mrs. Ray is enthusiastic in telling her many friends how cured was effected. Rheumatism and eczema frequently go together, and in this case caused the most keen distress imaginable. All the swelling and puffiness resulting from many years of rheumatism have disappeared, and there is not a pain or an ache left.

Mr. G. H. Ray, R.R. No. 1, Kincardine, Ont., writes: "Mrs. Ray has been using your Kidney-Liver Pills. She was very bad with rheumatism and eczema, and had had that fearful itch for twenty-seven years. It was simply terrible what she suffered. I persuaded her to try $1.00 worth of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, she is now on the last box, and let me tell you she scarcely knows herself; she is so free from both these diseases. All the swelling and puffiness caused by the rheumatism has gone away, and she has gone down in weight 18½ pounds. She never has an ache nor pain, biliousness nor sick headache all these months. She often says herself: 'How glad I am that I know what to do instead of paying doctors so much to make me worse.'"

There is only one way that the poisons in the blood can be cleaned away and the cause of pains and aches removed, and that is by the healthful action of the kidneys, liver and bowels. Because Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills act directly and specifically on these organs and ensure their activity they remove the cause of rheumatism and other dreadfully painful and fatal diseases. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanston, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

CHAPTER IX.

From genteel poverty to vast wealth! Think of it! From the life of small economies, badly cooked fare, home-made dresses, sparse pocket-money to an almost unlimited wealth. The change was stupefying, overwhelming. They sat up until the small hours of the morning, Ricky with them, discussing it, turning it over and over with infinite wonder and half-credulous joy.

To Carrington himself it meant a rest from hard work and harassing care; to Carrie it meant no more housekeeping worries, no more strivings to make both ends meet; to Maida—She sat almost silent while the others talked one against the other, and looked at the eager, excited faces dreamily. The change was welcomed by her, of course, but it did not mean so much to her. She was quite indifferent as to what she ate or drank, and was almost as indifferent as to what she wore. While Carrie was struggling with the housekeeping money and the dress-making, Maida had been absorbed in her work, in the ambition of her life; and the ambition and the work, and the promise of success, had sufficed for her. She was happy enough; money meant so little to her. And now that they were rich, vastly rich, what about her life's work, her ambitious dreams? A vague feeling of regret stole over her; but she put it away from her, and tried to share in the general joy.

"It seems so wildly improbable," exclaimed Carrie, "that we—three—should have all this money. Are you sure we have not all gone mad, the whole family, with Ricky thrown in, and that we shouldn't presently realize that we have got straight-waistcoats on?"

Then she caught the flash of the diamonds with which she had decked Maida, and gave a little gasp. "Oh, no; it's true—it's true! Unless father has committed a burglary and stolen them."

Mr. Carrington checked the glass of whiskey-and-water which he was carrying to his lips, and shot a curious and startled glance at her. "Stolen them! What do you mean?" he demanded. "That's a strange and—er—extremely improper remark to make, Carrie."

She laughed, and leaning towards him, ruffled his grey hair. "It's only my fun, father," she said. "I've got to treat it as a huge, preposterous joke, or I shall really go off my head. It does seem wonderful, you must admit. Here we are, as poor as church mice a few hours ago, and suddenly—"

"You haven't told us how you made it, sir," put in Ricky, who had fits of rather gloomy silence during the evening. "Operating on 'Change, of course?"

Mr. Carrington replenished his glass and nodded sentimentally. "Just so. Operating on 'Change, as you say, Ricky," he responded, avoiding the lad's frankly questioning and

"I have been very happy—we have all been very happy in the old rooms, Carrie," she said, in her low voice. Carrie took her hand away impatiently.

"Yes, because you have known no better," she retorted. "You are like a beautiful bird of Paradise who is contented with a cheap wooden cage. Father, we must get a house, a whole house, at once. And a carriage—oh, Maida! fancy a carriage. How perfect you will look leaning back in a victoria drawn by a pair of blacks—we will have the black horses, father."

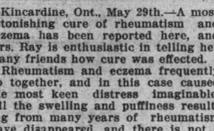

"Rather hearsey, isn't it?" murmured Ricky; but Carrie paid no heed to him, but ran on with suppressed excitement.

"BATTER UP" SOUNDS AS GREAT GUNS ROAR.

Canadians on French Front Open Baseball Season.

(From a Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)
British Headquarters in France, May 28.—The old adage of "all work and no play" has its application in war as well as in peace. The baseball season on the western front is in full swing. Under the very shadow of Vimy Ridge a great game was played yesterday afternoon before an all khaki assemblage on a bit of the battlefield on which the shell holes had been filled in and a rough grand stand erected for the officers and other spectators, including Gen. Horne, commanding the First British Army, who has become an enthusiastic fan.

The game was between teams representing two Canadian brigades. All the teams in what may be called the World War League are now composed of representatives of the Canadian bodies, but the players are anxiously awaiting the arrival of the American forces to arrange for an inter-league series. Games are played twice a week.

The Second Canadian Brigade was the winner over the Third Brigade by a score of 7 to 1. All the equipment had been brought from America, including the base bags. As a side show it was possible from the grand stand to see an occasional German shell dropping half a mile or so away. Airplanes were humming overhead. There was typical rooting by the Canadians and Americans among the khaki clad spectators.

SOME ROBBERY.

Brazil has fallen for the persuasive eloquence of Mgr. McGrath of the B. I. S. and has signed his roster. He will backstop for the Irishmen, and with Sinnott and Carrow twirling, their battery should be quite formidable.

BASEBALL IN 1925.

The baseball park was crowded on a lovely summer day. With roosters young and full of life and roosters old and gray. This was no plain wood structure like the grandstand of old. The peanut vendors moved about with grandeur and disdain. Bedecked as Spanish pages in the days of Philip's reign. The batboy's silver spangles shone resplendent in the sun; Groundkeeper Stancome's raiment was the best that could be spun. The press box in the grandstand with its busy telephones. Was built of purest marble studded thick with precious stones.

The Home Dressmaker should keep a Catalogue Scrap Book of our Pattern Cuts. These will be found very useful to refer to from time to time.

A Dainty Dress for Mother's Girl.

2086—This design is simple and charming. The waist is in Empire fashion and finished with tab extensions which may serve to hold a smart sash or girldie. The round neck edge is outlined by trimming bands. The sleeve may be finished in wrist or elbow length. Challie, lawn, organdie, gingham, voile, repp or silk may be used for this model.

The Pattern is cut in 4 sizes: 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. It requires 2½ yards of 44-inch material for a 4-year size.

A GOOD IDEA.

It has been suggested to us by several enthusiasts of the game, that instead of playing on Wednesday afternoons only, the regular schedule should be played at night in collaboration with the football league. This should be quite feasible now with the Daylight Bill in effect, and many of our citizens would thus have an opportunity of seeing the game who could not do so otherwise owing to its being played on holidays only. We pass the matter along to the League for their consideration.

IN THE SOUP.

The Bean Ball is a ball thrown by the pitcher directly at the batter's head with the object of putting fear into his heart, and thus make the possibility of striking him out so much easier. By a recent ruling of the National Commission, which is the only power in the World to alter the rules and regulations of baseball, the umpire-in-chief now has the authority to decide when such a ball is intentional, and has the option of ordering the batter to first base just as if he had been hit by a pitched ball. Some of our pitchers who depend on the Bean Ball will be in the soup now.

WHO SAID "CANNED?"

Householders are being cautioned now about canning their vegetables early. Someone should tip off the managers about their lemons.

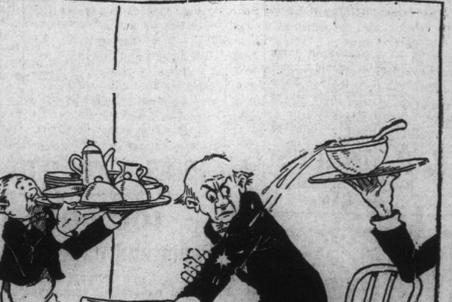

"SLINKERS!"

In Saturday's columns we will publish the rosters of the Clubs, as some have been unkind enough to say that there are "Slinkers" with all teams. You will then be able to judge for yourself.

Household Notes.

To remove wagon grease, rub the stain with lard, then wet with turpentine and finally wash with soap and water. Whenever you have either fresh fruits or vegetables left over from the day's use see that they are preserved. Even a silk blouse is the better of being put through a little gum water after washing to restore its original firmness. Meat once a day is a safe rule for adults; while once a day, and a very small amount, is a good rule for children. When blue serge and black satin are combined it is the usual thing to put on jet buttons.

Newfoundland's Scotch-Cured Herring

In spite of the increasing demand for Newfoundland Scotch-cured herring and the practical certainty that there will be no further supplies of foreign herring of any description during the coming season, prices at the quotations of a month ago, when there was no demand, are now operators are making a profit to buyers. This condition of affairs may be considered as perhaps the most perplexing in the history of the market of fish in this market. Other years have shown substantial quantities of some of them within the space of a few weeks, yet there is practically no change in the Newfoundland herring situation except that there is no business being done. There is considerable speculation in New York as to what the condition will be a month hence, especially if the positive assurance that no more herring will be exported to the United States this year or until the middle of the war. The market is waiting for this cure within the next few months and it will probably be a little difference whether the herring remain at the low level of 10¢ a bushel, the normal consumption of which is reduced. And should there be a supply of herring from Alaska, only a limited supply from Alaska, it will take but a few weeks to absorb all the Newfoundland herring in this market. Indeed, it has been looked ahead to this situation and have placed higher prices on the herring to absorb the surplus of the full demand. The entire supply of all hands in New York is now about 12,000 packages, much of it in 100-pound hands. The two largest holders probably have not more than 6,000 packages together, and the remainder is divided amongst perhaps a dozen smaller New supplies arrived on a steamer from St. John's on Thursday and it is reported that offerings were made as low as $14 and $15 for small fish. This lot, consisting of about 1,000 barrels, was the only shipment of herring for New York factory. The routine business of the week has been largely local, although some large orders have been filled. The prices have been on the basis of $14 and $15 for large fish, according to size and quality; $12.50 and $13.50 for selected fish; $13 and $14 for
