Forceful Arguments in Rhyme.

London, Oct. 30.—It is understood that the Kruger memoirs, of which a first installment of extracts has already been published in the Times, gives some light on the ex-president's opinion of men prominent in South African history. Mr. Kruger describes the "Jesuitical" Cecil Rhodes as the "curse of South Africa." He says: "No matter how base or contemptible, be it lying, bribery or treachery, all and every means were welcome to him."

Lord Milner he describes as "a typical judge, autocratic beyond endurance, lies, treachery, intrigues and secret investigations against the Government of the republics, these have all ways been the distinguishing marks of English politics."

British policy in general, the former president of the Transvaal sums up in the following sentence: "The Republic was practically dead, the Transvaal was a cloak for designs against the Republic. He describes how, after the Jameson raid, when the Republic was practically dead, the Republic was a cloak for designs against the Republic."

Mr. Kruger declares that the Transvaal national union was under Cecil Rhodes' paramount influence from its very inception, and describes it as having, from the very outset, used the demand for the franchise as a cloak for designs against the Republic. He describes how, after the Jameson raid, when the Republic was practically dead, the Republic was a cloak for designs against the Republic."
