DIVINE HEALING IS UPHELD IN SERMON

Rev. H. A. Koehler, Boston, Opens Meetings at All Saints' Church.

The special series of meetings conducted by Rev. H. A. Koehler of Boston in All Saints Church on Maitland street commenced last night with an appreciative audience. His subject was "Should Divine Healing Be Practiced?" He questioned his audience frequently during the sermon, asking "Has God Ever Healed People?" answering he did do it the most he will do it now. "Has God's power been shortened?" If not, then he is fully capable of healing now. "We are told," he concluded, "that man's necessity is God's opportunity." It is quite obvious that human skill has failed in eradicating disease or assisting nature in doing it. "Who can we call on when medical skill has failed to arrest the encroachment of death, if God cannot or will not come to our relief?" According to some philosophy, Christians should wait until this extreme measure has arrived before God's power of intervention is asked for. In the first place the physician is not only dealing with the flesh, but also the spirit. The spirit is incapable of functioning properly when the body becomes affected by disintegration. The physician should be a God-fearing individual. But why try everything else, from quack medicine to the greatest skill of man, before we call on God's chief representative that heaven might intervene?
