The War. The news is chiefly important in so rule

Let those who make the quarrels Be the only ones to fight, may yet be carried out in the present struggle. The aspect a week ago was little, encouraging. Everything then appeared to portend a general European struggle. If, however, Austria should firmly adhere to her pronounced, and apparently sincere, determination to maintain a strict neutrality, and if the belligerents keep faith in the matter of the neutrality of the German States, it is highly probable that the fight may yet be confined to the immediate parties thereto-that it will, in fact, partake very much of the character of a duel, Austria, on the side of France, and Russia on the side of Prussia, acting tain will occupy a position more on the outside, to see that innocent and less interested parties are not injured-much, in fact, in the character of a general peace-officer. In the last great Germen due! Napoleon occupied the position of a second, although in reality it was he who devised the whole intrigue and, for purposes of his own, set the parties wey is essential to the success of the great asked a stranger if it was a free fight, he meant delicately to convey that if he would like to 'cut in.' On the last cause he thought to attain his of jeet more efficiently by diplomacy—by tlay-ing Prussia and Austria against each other. But it turned out on that occasion that he found in Bismarck more than a match at intrigue. It is said that when Bismarck was at Biarritz he explained his plan to Napoleon, not only as to how the quarrel with Austria was to be femented into a war, but what he anticipated as the consequences of the campaign. Prussia, I am well aware, said he, can neither put into the field such a powerful army as Austria, nor provide the reserves that a reverse will call for. We shall be besten-not ignominiously, I hope and believe, but overpowered and repulsed. By this time you, the French, will be ready to some in; and as to the terms—here it is said he significantly passed his finger along the line of the Rhine which lay on a map on the table—we shall not dispute them

By his adroit stratagem Bismarck | rovided for French abstention, Louis Napoleon was taken with the wellfeigned humility and apparent frank-ness of the Count. He had been promised his bribe; he was only asked to wait for the opportune moment to receive it. The terms of such a compact, so compounded of trick and deception, must have bad no common charm for him; and it was clever of Bismarck to bast the trap for the crafty old rat with the savory morsel whose very odor was irresistible. But Austria was beaten, and beaten with such rapidity as defied all calculation. Prussia wanted no aid; she could do her own work; and she did it. But in pops the impartial man, It's my turn, now, says Napoleon, and peace was agreed to within sight of Vi-thought, to have been beaten and perbut merely in compliance with the

the 'old sportsman sulked' under the rebuff. Napoleon 'took nothing by the great German Duel. Will it be thought that Bismarck has passed the interim in a condition of rest-and-be-chankfulin a condition of rest-and-be-dankful-ness, a false security? Not likely. Prussia will be found well prepared In the present affair Napoleon enters as a principal. Diplomacy failed He now draws the aword. We have said there is hope that the present war may yet be conducted as a duel between the immediate parties thereto. If the other Great Powers can no longer hope to bring about a peaceful adjustment, it is to be wished they may at least prevent a third party cutting in. If it really be far as it may be regarded as indicating a matter of necessity that this quarrel shall be decided by the sword, let us see fair play, and the first great battle decide. Let the seconds look to the details and, as is their province, interfere when such a wound shall have been inflicted as may be deemed a sufficient vin-dication of the quarrel. There is one point to which we are disposed to take exception. Napoleon has, it is said, interdicted army correspondents for the press, thus ciuelly depriving the world of the opportunity to obtain snything like an intelligible account of the war.

This is too bad. Why Napoleon should take such a position appears unaccountable, unless, indeed, he feels with the man who, upon being asked what he had to say in his defence against a charge of having stolen a quadrant, replied, Your worship, it's an agly business, and the less said about it the will be seen by reference to our telegraphic columns that the Imperial Government is ready to guarantee loans necessary to conready to guarantee loans necessary to con-struct the Canadian Pacific Railway. This can surprise no one who has devoted any thought to the subject. In fact it is what position amongst the nations she must avail herself of this the true North-West Passage, it was not a private or family quarrel and the shortest route to India and to Asia, generally. The English mind has become cocasion, although doubtless not much troubled with such scrupulous courtery, Napelcon did not 'cut in' simply befor the promotion of such objects. If the railway is to be built at all how else could the necessary capital be better raised than through the medium of Imperial Guarantee We trust the assurance that the British paall misgivings from doubting minds. In h

CELESTIAL FAMILY JARS .- The Celestial world, it would appear, is as subject to little domestic unpleasantnesses as the more terrestrat sphere which we inhabit. Some months ago a child of the Flowery Kingdom, en route to the home of his boyhood, was requested by a Chinese fiend to bring on his return the wife of the latter. On the on his return the wife of the latter. On the last steamer the travelling friend returned to Victoria bringing with him the helpmest of the other. Now it so happened that on the passage out another Chinaman, who does wash as at Napaimo, fell violently in love with the almondeyed beauty and laid violent siege to her beart and band. The fair one, nothing loth, accepted the offer, on one acadities, that her lover should compensate her husband for the heavy loss (1) he was about to inflict upon-him in taking her away. This the representative of Nausimo consented to do, placing in the hands of the husband's friend $360 is gold coin, with which sum he engaged to assuage the grief of the heart-broken husband. Instead of doing this, it is alleged, he pocketed the coin and snapped his fingers in the face of the deserted partner. The apprincipal distinct has serted partner. The upprincipled friend has been summoned on a charge of k duspping woman, and the woman, who is now at Nanaimo, will be sent for to give evidence.

A Tight Fir .- A man was met by officer Farrell yesterday morning at 2 o'clook carrying a sait of clothes and a pair of boots. He declined to give an account of himself, and being slightly intoxicated, the officer took him in custody. Yesterday moraing he brought reputable witnesses from whom he had purchased the clothes.

thought, to have been beaten and persued and imploring aid from France, was dictating very haughtly her terms on the Danube. Even Italy had spurned the offer of Venetia from the hands of the Emperor, and disdainfully refused as a gift what she claimed as a right. Every event and every man seemed destined to disappoint the expectation of him who had devised the whole intrigue—except La Marmora, who alone played faithfully the part assigned to him and ran his stupid head against the Quadrilateral. Meanwhile Napoleon sent in his little bill, not pressingly, but merely in compliance with the habits of the house. Bismarck returns
