for the president to return in safety to lead his people. We are well aware of the record of human right violations and potential human rights violations of Mr. Aristide. What's going on now isn't any better and he was their elected leader and there are constitutional ways to deal with those violations. He finally has...and I'll close on this because what this has told us is that it is not good enough in a country with 200 years of an appalling history behind it, it's not good enough to go in and monitor an election that you have to stay and help the institutions work. Because nobody in Haiti trusts each other and I guess I better go.

But that is...so the next time we monitor an election we're going to discuss how to follow through.
