

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY, Dec. 4, 1877.

MY DEAR MR. SABIN: I have often had occasion to use your "Dictionary of Books relating to America," and have never looked into it without admiring its immense extent, thoroughness, and accuracy. It is, so far as my knowledge of the subject goes, beyond all comparison the best work on the bibliography of works on America, and, indeed, if but one work of the kind could be had, it is the only one to be thought of. I earnestly hope you will be able very soon to complete it throughout, and you will then stand as the Brunet of Americana.

Very truly yours,
FREDERIC BEECHER PARKINS.

This may certify that, in my opinion, Sabin's "Dictionary of Books relating to America" is a work of great merit; that an immense amount of intelligent and conscientious labor has been spent upon it; and that, so far as it is completed, it is the best existing compilation covering that important department of bibliography.

NEW YORK, May 15, 1879.

MY DEAR SIR: I must congratulate you on having brought your "Dictionary of Books relating to America" down to the word Markham.

It was an immense undertaking, which many thought you would never succeed in completing, but you have carried out your plan thoroughly.

We have had bibliographical accounts of Nuggets, of special collections embracing certain departments or classes, which were guides to amateurs and collectors; but a general dictionary of all works relating to America has been sadly wanted by students of all kinds, editors and writers, as a reference and guide. The hundreds of publications which professed collectors ignore, and which find no place in elaborate bibliographies, are here given. No one studying up thoroughly any subject connected with the country can fail to find it of the utmost service. For my own part I have found it invaluable. The printed catalogues of all our great libraries cover only part of the ground, and require great time to examine in order to trace a subject.

For important and rare books I have found the array of editions very full, and the bibliographical description accurate and full, and combining as you do the labors of previous bibliographers with your own unusually great opportunity in examining the incalculable number of books that pass through your hands, you have made some articles admirable little monographs in themselves.

I have taken the greatest interest in your work from the outset, from the comprehensiveness and practical utility, and I know that its value is generally appreciated.

Yours truly,

JOSEPH SABIN, ESQ.

MY DEAR SIR: I have no hesitation in saying that I consider your "Dictionary of Books relating to America," as by far the most important bibliographical work published in America, and one of the most important ever issued from the press. Indeed, I know of nothing equal to it, unless it is the printed Catalogue of Books relating to the History of France, printed at enormous expense by the French Government. When completed your work will supply a want which nothing else does.

Yours truly,

JOE. SABIN, ESQ.
