It is also claimed by the foe the Roumanians lost 1000 men as oners in addition to their killed man original front trenches of an exceptionally strong nature. The British officially record the taking of the strongly-fortified Village of St. Pierre * * * *

Unofficial despatches from eye-witnesses of the battle say that the British attack extended along the front between the Grandcourt-Pozieres road and a point considerably north of Beaumont-Hamel, that the British line had been advanced at some points for a distance of 2000 yards and that most of the British objectives had been gained. The Germans considered the positions which they lost at a single blow to be impregnable. Beaumont-Hamel was captured, in addition to St. Pierre Divion. Beau-mont-Hamel is said to have equalled Thiepval in the extent and security of its dugouts. The Germans were taken by surprise by this flank blow and the only stout resistance that they offered was at Serre. This new advance threatens the envelopment of Miraumont on the Albert-Arras railway.

Petrograd reports that the T launched an attack in the region Oituz Valley and pushed back the manians, but the Roumanians in 郑 章 Opportunity for fighting this action was given by the shape into which the German lines were twisted by the British advances south of the Ancre launched an attack north and sou Toivenoling and they occupied a since July 1. These gains cut straight into the German front, and after the capture of Thiepval the German positions between the brook and Gommecourt jutted out into the allied front as a big bulge. The further threats to Peronne and Bapaume doubtless served to induce the Germans EX-MAYOR GEARY HAS to concentrate their reserves in front of those points, because their loss would compel a further Teuton retreat. The Germans were caught napping and General Haig took advantage of this preoccupation to drive into them with his left.

The ridge captured north of the Ancre and the Thiepval area forms about the strongest defensive popsition in France, and its loss to the Germans is sufficient to teach them that if they cannot keep such strongholds they will never be able to keep weaker ones. The lines just carried held up the advance of the Ulster division on the first of July because they were far more powerful than the section where the British advanced. The British now threaten to advance on a front five miles wider, or on a front of 16 miles, and this prospect calls on the Germans to provide more troops for the defence. It comes at a bad time for the enemy, for he has either to throw at least three to four, more divisions into the furnace, or to run the risk of having his front completely smashed and his line rolled up and enveloped. The effects of this blow will be felt even on the Transylvanian front..

The battle is proceeding with great violence, with the allies advancing to BERLIN LOOKING FOR the attack.

As the allied advance in the Dobrudia proceeds, the position of Von Latter's Reply on Submari Mackensen becomes more and more precarious. His forces are being subjected to strong frontal pressure, while unofficial reports announce that Russian forces have been landed in two places on the Dobrudja side of the Danube below Cernavoda. It is to be presumed that heavy fighting is proceeding, with the foe attempting to push the Russians back, and the Russians striving to consolidate their bridgehead and to throw across more pontoons. Constanza has again been bombarded by the Russian Black Sea fleet and it is not improbable that another force will be landed on the Amsterdam. It is said the Nor coast. Petrograd has reports that Von Mackensen has already lost one-third of his forces from disease and reverses.
