Humour: False and True
Nothing so foolish as the laugh of foot's—Caricature.
Among all kinds of writing, there is none in which authors are more apt to misapply than in works of humour, as there is none in which they are more ambitious to excel. It is not in imagination that poets with monsters, a head that is filled with extravagant conceptions, which is capable of furnishing the world with divisions of this nature; and yet it is look into the productions of several writers, who set up for men of humour, what irregular fancies, what unnatural distortions of thought do we meet with!
If they speak nonsense, they believe they are talking humour; and when they have drawn together a scheme of absurd inconsistent ideas, they are not able to read it over to themselves without laughing.
These poor wretches endeavour to gain the reputation of wit and humourists; and, in order to do so, they consider that nothing is so good as to be continually laughing at the most ridiculous things, and to be in the most ridiculous things, as well as all other; and a certain regularity of thought, which must discover the writer to be a man of sense, at the same time that he appears to be a man of wit. For my part, when I read the road to delirious mirth of a man, I cannot be so barbarous as to be unsatisfied myself with it, but rather am glad to see it, then laugh at anything he says.

Marry Not Without Love
The most egregious blunder in the history of matrimony is committed when a man and a woman marry. This is not a matter of course, but a matter of choice. It is not a matter of chance, but a matter of consequence. It is not a matter of indifference, but a matter of importance. It is not a matter of triviality, but a matter of gravity. It is not a matter of insignificance, but a matter of magnitude. It is not a matter of obscurity, but a matter of prominence.
It is not a matter of mediocrity, but a matter of excellence. It is not a matter of inferiority, but a matter of superiority.
