STRATHCONA'S IN LONDON.

Interesting Extract from a Letter Written by New Brunswick's Agent General. Describing King Edward's Review, Presentation of Medals and King's Colors to Canada's Soldiers.

Before this I should have told you he had introduced to him by Col. Steele each officer in turn, shaking hands or thanking him for his welcome services to Sovereign and Empire.

It must indeed be gratifying to Canadians that the first public function of the new reign, as well as the last one in that of the dear old Queen, was to do honor to the brave soldiers of Canada.

The day is a never-to-be-forgotten one to those Canadians residing in the capital of the Empire, who were the invited guests of King Edward VII. on this proud occasion.

I have been in bed nearly all the week with a mild attack of rheumatism, so bad that although I had one of those greatly sought after cards for the royal gallery of the house of lords for the opening of parliament by the King and Queen on Thursday, I did not go.

It was a long programme, too. After the royal salute, he shook hands with Col. Steele and inspected the regiment, walking up and down the four long rows of troopers. Then every officer and man, from the colonel to the bugler, received his medal from the hand of the King himself, our dear and beautiful Queen Alexandra standing by his side, with a sweet and kindly smile for every one of Canada's brave sons, who had the courage, at a range of just one yard, to look in her eyes! This alone took a good part of an hour.

His Majesty then presented the regiment with a beautiful King's color—a very pretty part of the ceremony, of which you will have read details.

The King had descended from the terrace to the walk below to present the flag, and from there he stepped forward a few yards more on to the lawn to witness the march past.

This was performed in a very creditable manner, considering the cramped space within which it had to be performed. We naturally did not expect to see a march past of the Guards. It was evident, nevertheless, that these fine fellows, whose fame as brave and extremely skilful soldiers has spread from one end of the Empire to the other (and to bounties beyond the Empire, too), were men, because of the freedom of the prairie or the veldt that the restricted movements in the barrack square.

The King then ordered the regiment to be formed into a hollow square, that he might address the officers and men, before proceeding further. I heard him ask for Lord Strathcona, who, by the way, kept well in the background up till this. The dear old gentleman came forward, sat in hand, and I heard the King say to him in a most reproving tone, "Do put your men on more proceeding further. His Majesty made an eloquent little speech, and the colonel made a neat, modest and soldierly reply, which, by the way, all our Canadian officers seem to have the knack of doing to perfection, to judge from what I have heard on the part of the late visitors and the present ones.

After dinner the time came to listen to the explanation. The government has considered the public and the same progress of our extravaganza was promised to follow and provide for his servatives were out to strike out items. The house rose at this time to listen to the explanation. Mr. spending money for plans or specifications of the government was die pleasant.
