Mrs. Thornley goes on to tell that the vote on this occasion was a tie which was settled by one man who was brought in in a state of intoxication who cast the ballot against the temperance party. A wave of intemperance struck London again about three years ago. Police court cases became ore numerous, the statement of charitable societies and the evidences of the streets proved that drinking was on the increase, especially among the young. The W. C. T. He had said several times that when the hour of his death came he would meet it bravely, that he had been a soldier and knew how to die. His attitude on the scaffold bore out his words in full. He stood erect, heels close together, his shoulders back and his gaze directed over the heads of the crowd toward the far end of the corridor. The Rev. J. R. Burkland, who was reciting the prayers for the dying as the procession approached the scaffold, continued them while Hoch was preparing for execution. Deputy Sheriff Peters spoke to Hoch, asking him to move backwards, as he was not squarely on the drop. Hoch glanced down at his feet, moving quickly to the rear and again resumed his military attitude. He had said that he did not care to say anything on the scaffold, but while Deputy Sheriff Peters was pinioning his feet, Hoch spoke to him in a low voice. "Do you want to say something?" asked Deputy Sheriff Peters.

"Yes," said Hoch. The Rev. Mr. Burkland was still reciting the prayers, and the jaller mo-tioned with his hand to silence him. The clergyman, not noticing, continued his prayer, and Whitman stepped to the edge of the scaffold and asked him to desist for a moment.

As soon as the voice of the clergyman had ceased, Hoch spoke up in a strong, clear tone, and with a pronounced German accent, saying:
"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do. I must die, an innocent man. Good-bye."

He bit off the last two words in a puty sheriff agreed to wait. The attorneys then returned to the court and as he had uttered them, the drop fell. Dr. McNamara, a county physician, was at Hoch's side the instant he fell, and declared that death had been instantaneous, the neck having been

AN IMPORTANT INVENTION

The Hantsport Advance contains a lengthy article on an automatic fire and burglar alarm invented by Percy H. Eaton of Newcastle, N. B., and patented in the United States and Canada. The contrivance, says the Advance, is very simple in its construction. The case of the indicator somewhat resembles a Bell telephone. This indicator is placed in the office of a hotel, or in the sitting room of a private house. From this indicator small wires run to the various rooms. The mechanism is such that as soon as a fire breaks out a powerful alarm bell on the indicator case is sounded. This also shows the exact room in which the blaze has taken place. Mr. Eaton is 36 years of age and a native of Canard, N. S.
