The "Dorothy" Bag

The "Dorothy" bag, the latest receptacle for Milady's knick-knacks. The bag came into unenviable notoriety when it was conspicuously carried by thousands of raffish English suffragettes in their smashing campaign.

tures are included in the line of the parade which will wind its way through downtown New York, rain or shine. The women participants generally have provided themselves with white suits and a uniform style of hat, obtained at the suffrage headquarters for 35 cents each, warranted to be becoming to old and young, short or tall, blonde or brunette. Recollections of the impression made by last year's similar demonstration hold promise that this year will see a far greater impression made by the marching ranks of Votes for Women advocates.

Not the least striking sight will be the variety of colors represented by the different states and societies as their waving flags pass in review. An interesting feature of the procession is a Chinese delegation carrying banners labeled, "We are from a country where women vote."

LETTER FROM BOSTON GIRL

Boston, May 11.—The Titanic disaster was being discussed by two young ladies, as by everybody else, while on their way in town on a suburban car. One of them, a reasonably intelligent looking young person of about 26 or 28, remarked that she never could see what people wanted to take the long, mountainous trip across the ocean for, anyway; she wouldn't go to Europe for anything. The other looked surprised and exclaimed, "Why, I suppose it isn't so much the trip over as the things one sees after getting there."

Number one looked disgruntled and sighed, as she exclaimed, "But, what is there to see?" The little incident reminded me of a story told by a prominent minister about a guest on board a yacht owned by an American millionaire. The party had been cruising about the Mediterranean for some time and came to anchor in the harbor of Athens. The guest was all enthusiasm over the possibility of visiting the blood of the Mediterranean for some time and came to anchor in the harbor of Athens. Buy rat traps. A bounty on rat tails has been proposed by Mrs. H. G. Colby, a Boston woman, member of the Women's Municipal League of the Hub, at the annual meeting of that organization. Mrs. Colby contends that the only feasible method of ridding the state of such pests as rats and flies, is to offer a bounty for those killed. Many cities have already offered bounties to children or grownups for a certain number of flies killed, but the collection of rat tails is an idea credited to New York city where the bounty of three cents recently offered has set every boy in the community to catching rats. There are undoubtedly plenty of places in Boston and other New England towns and cities where an enterprising and agile youth could earn a small fortune in a comparatively short time by carrying on a campaign to exterminate the disease-bearing and property-destroying rodents. Meantime an Ohio city offers ten cents a hundred for captured flies. With the variety of places where these insects may be killed at the rate of a waik, it is not surprising that they are caught by hundreds in cages, there should be a certain business for the school boy out of hours.

The axe at the elms of the Harvard yard during the coming summer will make sounds distressing to every loyal son of the oldest university. Entomologists some time ago confessed that they were worried and practically gave up their endeavors to save the old gettens from doom. The insects had got too much the start, and it has been realized for several years that the old trees which have been the glory of the college yard for generations must sooner or later go the way of the historic pump. Now it is intimated that the elms will be chopped this summer, and that saplings of red oak, a much harder species, will be planted to replace them. The saplings average about 20 feet in height, and three inches in diameter, so that it will take a generation for them to attain anything like the proportions of the elms. It is believed, however, that in five years they may be large enough to afford considerable shade. The elms have given the Harvard yard whatever of beauty it possessed, casting a gentle shade over the many architectural defects. Since their doom has been struck, efforts have been started to enlarge the gardens around each of the buildings and to plant vines of ivy and honeysuckle in front of them and along the fences. Boston and New England suffragettes have been anxiously awaiting the monster demonstration for suffrage to be held in the form of a monster parade in New York city, May 4. Fifteen thousand marchers, women riders on horseback, representatives of every class and occupation open to women, kind, groups of men sympathizers and many interesting and impressive fea-
