A COMPARISON.

Life in the Yukon country country is far from being made up of the terrible experiences and hardships in the minds of most people living in ide communities. As a matter t lact the conditions for the most part are absolutely the reverse of the ular conception.

When all things are considered, it is by no means an exaggeration to say that the general conditions of life are better and more satisfactory in the territory than in the average community in the more settled districts of Canada or the United states. The rigors of the winter accompanied by serihardships for the reason that igs are constructed to withand cold weather and wearing aparel is adapted to the same purpose hard winter in the East invariably brings untold suffering in its train, but in this country experience has ly shown that the co
