MY LADY'S CHIFFONS.

What a bewildering mixture of muslins, ribbons, laces, coats, vests, knickers, high collars and funny belts are found nowadays in a woman's wardrobe. From the severe tweed outing or wheeling suits to the fussy, much-trimmed odd waists is quite a transition, but they're all necessary. One advantage of wearing fancy waists is that the same skirt will often do for them all, each change of waist making an apparent new costume. A fashionable mohair skirt, well cut and interlined with the waterproofed Fibre Chamois, will look equally well with any one of a half-dozen different waists, and will outwear them all, keeping its style to the end. Moreover, this interlining is so light in weight that it gives all the necessary buoyant stiffness without adding a burden of weight, and being unaffected by moisture never allows the skirt to become limp or sag down. The plain untrimmed skirts now worn depend altogether for their style upon the "hang." Let their rippling folds once become crushed or out of shape and all the beauty is gone. So it is wise to avoid any chance of the disheartening experience of seeing your nobby new skirt hors de combat after the first unexpected shower or tightly packed trunk, by using this popular Fibre Chamois, which positively retains its stiffness through everything, and is inexpensive enough to be in every lady's reach.
