Fox had a good start of the officer and an side in safety before the American officer could have overtaken him. When at the middle of the bridge

Fox deliberately leaped over the railing and into the swiftly running and icy cold water of the river, while the officier looked on in amazement. Fox was carried by the current to a pier in the centre of the river used for log driving purposes, onto which he man-aged to crawl, and from which he put forth lusty calls for help. A number of men gathered, but there were no means of succor at hand until the man had been awakened who had access to a storehouse on the bank where the chains, etc., used in log driving 'are stored in winter. From here a rope was secured and by tying it to a brick which was thrown towards the pier they were enabled to get one end of it to Fox in his imperiled position, the weather being intensely cold at the time. Fox made three turns of the rope about his arm and grasped the end in his teeth and in this way he was drawn ashore. But the long exposure to the cold had had its effect, and when he was pulled ashore the grip that held the rope end was the grip of death, for life had departed. Fox was about forty years of age possessed of a fine tenor voice, and a few years ago was singing in leading musical organizations. In late years liquor had got the best of him, and the tragedy of last night marks the close of a once promising life. He had
