

London Advertiser.

FOUNDED IN 1863.
NOON AND EVENING DAILY.
WESTERN ADVERTISER WEEKLY.
THE LONDON ADVERTISER CO.,
Limited, Publishers,
191-192 Dundas Street, London, Ont.

PHONE NUMBERS:
Business Department..... 191
Editorial Rooms..... 192 and 193
Job Printing Department..... 192

TO SUBSCRIBERS.
Readers of the Advertiser are requested to favor the management by reporting any irregularities in delivery.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.
Daily, Delivered by Carrier in City..... 10
One Year..... 10
Daily, Delivered by Carrier Outside City..... 10
One Year..... 10
One Month..... 10
Daily, by Mail, Outside City..... 20
One Year..... 20

The Advertiser is on sale regularly at the following news stands where subscriptions may be left:
Burlington, N. Y.—R. J. Seidenburg, Ellington Station.
Chicago, Ill.—Chicago Newspaper Agency, 10 Madison Street.
London, Ont.—Kentucky International News Company.
Montreal, Que.—Peter Murphy, Post Office News Station.
Toronto—Argos Hotel News Stand, Toronto, Rossin House News Stand.

LONDON, WEDNESDAY, JAN. 26.

A SPECTACULAR SITUATION.

Assuming that the Irish group will hold the balance of power, what is to be the course of the Asquith Government, or what are the prospects of a stable government of any kind? These questions are being asked, now that the centre of interest is shifting from the election results to the new Parliament, which assembles next month.

Mr. Redmond says the Government's first duty must be to deal with the House of Lords. He promises Mr. Asquith the support of the Nationalists for this object before the home rule issue is raised. Mr. Asquith, Mr. Lloyd-George, and other cabinet ministers have declared they will not hold office without the assurance that the House of Lords will be shorn of its absolute veto power. So far the Liberals and Nationalists are in accord, but how are the Lords to be mastered? One method would be to summon to the new Parliament only those peers known to be favorable to the Government. The peers who received no writs could not legally sit or vote in the Upper House. Another method would be creation of new peers in numbers sufficient to overcome all resistance. The co-operation of the King must be obtained in either case. The London News professes to know that Mr. Asquith will advise the King to consent to one of these courses, and will resign if the request is refused.

The Unionist peers may volunteer to satisfy the Government and rescue his Majesty from the awkward position in which they have placed him by their unconstitutional rejection of the budget. The London Times hints at this alternative when it urges a conference of the Unionist and Liberal leaders. But the Government cannot afford to accept less than the absolute surrender of the Lords. The mere assurance that they would pass the budget would not be sufficient. The administration would be bound to reintroduce some of the other progressive measures rejected or mutilated by the peers. Among them are the Scottish land bill, the "one-man-one-vote" bill, the education bill, the housing bill, and the town-planning bill. In addition, the Government is pledged to a grant of self-government to Ireland, and to Welsh disestablishment. These are reasons why Mr. Asquith and his colleagues are compelled to demand a settlement of the question of the Lords' veto before they can proceed with the business of Parliament. It is an indispensable condition of their continuance in office. The Premier has so far kept his own counsel, but he will probably take the public into his confidence when the elections are finished, and before the new Parliament meets. His resignation would, of course, mean another election at once, as the Unionists would be unable to carry any measures in the new House of Commons. There is little likelihood, either, that they would come out of another election with a majority over all parties combined. Deadlock and confusion would reign until the Lords voluntarily effaced themselves, or until the King permitted the House of Commons to work its will.

THE OLD TARIFF AND THE NEW.

Hon. Wm. Paterson's recent speech in the House of Commons was one of the most valuable contributions to the budget debate. The Liberal party took office committed to a reduction of the tariff, and Mr. Paterson showed how the promise had been fulfilled. In the list of 1897 there were on the list 481 dutiable items, and 297 free items. Some 70 or 80 of these dutiable items were placed on the free list, and of these some four, used principally by the farmers—Indian corn, fence wire, binder twine, and cream separators—would have paid under the old tariff about a million dollars. That amount has been saved to the farmers of the country. In addition to these 70 or 80 articles placed absolutely on the free list, some 150 dutiable items in the old tariff were charged a lower duty in the new; and after that reduction had been made 12½ per cent more was taken off those brought from Great Britain. The following year 25 per cent was taken off, and two years later 31-3 per cent was taken off. What this means will be seen when it is remembered that last year the value of our imports from Britain amounted to $54,000,000. In order to estimate the benefit to the people of the tariff reduction made by the Liberals the average rate of duty on goods dutiable and free must be taken. This in 1876 was 18-28—that is, on every $100 worth of goods there was paid on an average a customs tax of $18-28. Last year only $16-11 was charged on every $100 worth of goods, a reduction of $2-17 per $100. Yet, under this reduced taxation, the customs revenue this year amounts to $60,000,000, as compared with $17,000,000 or $18,000,000 under the tariff prior to 1897.

TO SUPPRESS COBALT THIEVES.

A bill has passed the Commons which it is expected will go far toward meeting an evil referred to by Hon. Clifford Sifton in his address before the conservation commission, namely, the loss sustained by miners in the Cobalt camp through persons taking valuable mineral without paying or accounting for it. Very valuable ore—in some cases nearly pure silver—has been carried away from the mines at Cobalt and sold for liquor at what are known as "blind pigs." The purchasers are parties who make a business of it, and who, when they have accumulated a quantity worth while, take it to Toronto and other cities and sell it.

The bill is in the form of an amendment to the criminal code, and enacts that everyone is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, having in his possession or on his premises with his knowledge any rock, ore, mineral, stone, quartz, or other substance containing gold or silver, or any unsmelted or untreated or unmanufactured or partly smelted, partly treated, or partly manufactured gold or silver, is unable to account satisfactorily for or prove his right to the possession of the same.

The enactment, however, will not apply to the Yukon Territory, for the reason that conditions of placer mining are quite different from those of quartz mining. In the Yukon at one time it was quite the custom to use nuggets of gold, the results of placer mining, as currency. A miner carried his pouch in which he had such gold dust as he had won during the day or week, and it passed current by weight, and probably does so still. But the possession of quartz of greater or less value, having possibly a very high percentage of precious metal, and in the whole amounting to considerable sums, by some person who is not a regular dealer, is certainly something which requires to be accounted for. It has been found necessary both in the Transvaal and Australia to have similar legislation enacted.

The chief objection to the measure was that it reverses the well-understood rules of criminal practice as to the burden of proof; but, as the Minister of Justice, who supported the bill, pointed out, it is not an unknown thing either in civil or criminal prosecution that the burden of proof has rested upon the person who is charged. In the case of mineral thefts it is now impossible to secure a conviction, no matter how plain the evidence may be, for the reason that it is impossible to identify the particular piece of ore or any quantity of ore which may be found in the possession of the person accused.

The "Celtic" fringe is permitting the British Government to finish strong.

Who are the real Unionists? Surely not those who talk as though the Nationalists were Outlanders and had no right to be counted as a factor in the new parliament?

The legislative council of India, which admits the natives to a larger share in the government, met for the first time yesterday. Freedom is "slowly broadening down" in the Indian empire. It is a case where the slow process is the only safe one, but it is a process that must go on if Great Britain is to be true to her own traditions.

If the farmers were getting all the advantage of the high price of food, there would be less to complain about. In the United States the trusts have come between producers and consumers, and are alleged to be getting the cream of the profit. How far the middlemen are able to do the same thing in Canada is a disputed question. The Ontario Legislature will look into it and may be able to satisfy consumers that they are victims only of the law of supply and demand.

The Advertiser believes it is giving readers an intelligent idea of the progress of the British elections. The Associated Press dispatches need to be elucidated. For instance, this morning they asserted that of "33 results declared on Tuesday" the Unionist had nine gains and the Liberals two. The average reader would jump at the conclusion that of 33 contested elections yesterday, the Unionists made a net gain of seven. Nothing of the kind happened. Only ten of yesterday's elections were declared, the other 23 being Monday's "left-overs." The Liberals had a comparatively good day yesterday, as the Advertiser's dispatches show. The results in 37 constituencies yesterday were not known till this afternoon.

NEW VERSION.
[Calgary Advertiser.]
Sweet are the uses of advertisement.

THE POWER OF THE PURSE.

One thing about this English election which ought to be borne in mind is the power of the purse is overwhelmingly on the side of the Conservatives. The Lords themselves, the brewers, the distillers, the protectionist manufacturers, the friends of Lord Rothschild, have all been moved to put forth unusual effort. Only in Lancashire and Yorkshire have the free traders been able to distinctly overmatch their opponents, and here, too, are the great manufacturers interested in the continuance of free trade. Mr. Chamberlain and the Duke of Sutherland have not been a bit more basical than the late Mark Hanna in asking for money. Outside the manufacturing districts the Liberals and Laborites have had to depend on enthusiasm to replace money. Fortunately for them, the Scotch, the Welsh, the Irish and the Laborites take their politics terribly seriously. Money is only an unwelcome necessity. In that view of things it is a great deal that the Asquith Government has been able to pull through so well.

THE ONLY WAY.
[Baltimore American.]
"Doesn't Binks eat pie with inward misgiving?"
"Naw; he eats it with a knife."

QUEERER THE BANK.
[Judge.]
Uncle Bill—How much money have you got in the bank, Tommy?
Tommy—Not much. The depositors have fallen off awfully since Violet got engaged.

TOO WISE.
[Life.]
Former (at the grindstone)—Well, why don't yer turn?
City Nipper—Naw! I don't fool me ag'in. Whenever I turn ye go and bear down with the axe.

LUCKY SEVEN.
[Philadelphia Record.]
"Yes," said the respondent man, "I was a seventh son."

"And didn't it bring you luck?" asked the superstitious one.

"Well, if being obliged to wear the cast-off clothes of old, Cole is lucky, it did," replied the despondent man.

ONE FOR RESTAURANT MEN.
[Toronto News.]
The price of rubber is exceedingly high, as anyone can ascertain by ordering a steak at lunch.

THE THREE P'S.
[Toronto Globe.]
The peer, the person and the politician have made a strong political combination in Britain.

A NEAT TRICK.
[Exchange.]
Colonel (1899)—So you lost half your forces in ambush?
Lieutenant—Yes, sir. The enemy rigged up a cannon to look like a moving picture machine, and the boys just fought for a chance to get in front of it!

HIS CREDIT WAS GOOD.
[Life-Bits.]
A distinguished Irish lawyer, always in impoverished circumstances, once took a friend to a restaurant to see his magnificent new house in Dublin.

"Don't you think," he said, with a complacent look about him, "that I deserve great credit for this?"

The friend answered, dryly, "and you appear to have got it."

THE TRUTH IN RANK RHYME.
[Detroit News.]
Some have meat that canna eat,
And some can eat that want it,
But some that eat that want to eat
Because they've sworn again it.

THE POWER OF THE PRESS.
[Boston Herald.]
The American-Canadian system of a general election day would have proved a welcome relief from this situation. If the Liberals could have had their way this reform would have been brought about years ago. But the Tories of the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such a change, which would interfere with the privilege of plural voting which is enjoyed by the landed classes. In England the election of early and often under the sanction of law. If the Liberals had their way the public houses would be closed on election day, as they are in Massachusetts. But the House of Lords always have objected to such