Westerners are too readily inclined them may not have the courage to to knock the East and possibly vice say so. versa. This, I think is due to the fact that so many know too little of the conditions and possibilities of the Dominion at large, many of the inhabitants in the Western Provinces having emigrated from the Old Country, who never saw Eastern Canada except in passing through from Halifax, St. John or Montreal. Naturally coming to such a big country as Eastern Canada, we would not expect them to know anything of the conditions of our fair Eastern Provinces. On the other hand, how can we expect Easterners to know much of the real conditions in the West outside of what they have read and been told. without having personally seen and experienced for themselves. To my mind instead of pulling apart we should be united.
